Farewell the tranquil mind! farewell content! Shakespeare.
TRANQUILLITY. n. f. [tranquillitas, Latin; tranquillitas, Fr.] Quiet; peace of mind; peace of condition; freedom from perturbation. Leave

TRA

Leave off.
To let a weary wretch from her due rest,
And trouble dying souls tranquillity. Fairy Qy. b. ii.
You can scarce imagine any hero passing from one stage of life to another with so much tranquillity, to easy a transition, and so laudable a behaviour. Pope.
TRANSACT. v. a. [transactus, Lat.]
1. To manage; to negotiate; to conduct a treaty or affairs.
2. To perform; to do; to carry on.
It cannot be expected they should mention particulars which were transacted amongst some few of the disciples only, as the transfiguration and the agony. Addison.
TRANSACTION. n. f. [transactio, Fr. from transact]. Negotiation; dealing between man and man; management; affairs; things managed.
It is not the purpose of this discourse to set down the particular transactions of this treaty. Clarendon, b. viii.
TRANSANIMATION. n. f. [trans and anima]. Conveyance of the soul from one body to another.
If the transanimation of Pythagoras were true, that the souls of men transmigrating into species answering their former natures, some men cannot escape that very brood whose fire Satan entered. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. vii.
TRANSCEND. v. a. [transcend, Latin].
1. To pass; to overpass.
It is a dangerous opinion to such popes, as shall transcend their limits and become tyrannical. Bacon.
To judge herself, she must herself transcend,
As greater circles comprehend the less. Davies.
2. To surpass; to outgo; to exceed; to excel.
This glorious piece transcends what he could think;
So much his blood is nobler than his ink. Waller.
These are they Deserve their greatness and unenvy'd stand,
Since what they act transcends what they command. Denb.
High though her wit, yet humble was her mind,
As if she could not, or she would not find,
How much her worth transcended all her kind. Dryden.
3. To surmount; to rise above.
Make disquisition whether these unusual lights be meteorological impressions not transcending the upper region, or whether to be ranked among celestial bodies. Hovell.
TRANSCEND. v. n. To climb. Not in use.
To conclude, because things do not easily sink, they do not drown at all, the fallacy is a frequent addition in human expressions, which often give distinct accounts of proximity, and transcend from one unto another. Brown.
TRANSCENDENCE. n. f. [from transcend].
TRANSCENDENCY. n. f. [from transcend].
1. Excellence; unusual excellence; supereminence.
2. Exaggeration; elevation beyond truth.
It is true greatness to have in one the frailty of a man, and the security of a God: this would have done better in poetry, where transcendencies are more allowed. Bacon's Essays.
TRANSCENDENT. adj. [transcendens, Lat. transcendent, Fr.]
Excellent; supremely excellent; passing others.
Thou, whose strong hand, with so transcendent worth,
Holds high the rein of fair Parthenope. Crafshaw.
There is, in a lawgiver, a habitual and ultimate intention of a more excellent and transcendent nature. Bishop Sanderfon.
If thou best he—But O! how fal'n, how chang'd
From him who in the happy realms of light,
Cloath'd with transcendent brightness, didst outline Myriads, though bright. Milton.
Oh charming prince! Oh transcendent maid! A. Phillips.
The right our Creator has to our obedience is of so high and transcendent a nature, that it can suffer no competition; his commands must have the first and governing influence on all our actions. Rogers's Sermons.
TRANSCENDENTAL. adj. [transcendentalis, low Lat.]
1. General; pervading many particulars.
2. Supereminent; passing others.
Though the Deity perceiveth not pleasure nor pain, as we do; yet he must have a perfect and transcendental perception of these, and of all other things. Grew's Cosmol. b. ii.
TRANSCENDENTLY. adv. [from transcendent]. Excellently; supereminently.
The law of Christianity is eminently and transcendently called the word of truth. South's Sermons.
TRANSCOLATE. v. a. [trans and colo, Latin]. To strain through a sieve or colander.
The lungs are, unless pervious like a sponge, unfit to imbibe and transcolate the air. Harvey.
TRANSCRIBE. v. a. [transcribo, Lat. transcribe, Fr.] To copy; to write from an exemplar.
He was the original of all those inventions from which others did but transcribe copies. Clarendon.
The most rigid exactors of mere outward purity do but transcribe the folly of him who pumps very laboriously in a ship, yet neglects to stop the leak. Decay of Piety.

TRA

If we imitate their repentance as we transcribe their faults, we shall be received with the same mercy. Rogers.
TRANSCRIBER. n. f. [from transcribe]. A copier; one who writes from a copy.
A coin is in no danger of having its characters altered by copiers and transcribers. Addison.
TRANSCRIPT. n. f. [transcript, Fr. transcriptum, Latin.] A copy; any thing written from an original.
The Grecian learning was but a transcript of the Chaldean and Egyptian; and the Roman of the Grecian. Glanville.
The decalogue of Moses was but a transcript, not an original. South's Sermons.
Dictate, O mighty Judge! what thou hast seen
Of cities and of courts, of books and men,
And deign to let thy servant hold the pen.
Through ages thus I may presume to live,
And from the transcripts of thy prose receive
What my own short-liv'd verse can never give. Prior.
TRANSCRIPTION. n. f. [transcription, Fr. from transcriptus, Lat.] The act of copying.
The ancients were but men; the practice of transcription in our days was no monster in their's: plagiary had not its nativity with printing, but began in times when thefts were difficult. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. i.
The corruptions that have crept into it by many transcriptions was the cause of so great difference. Brewer's Wood.
TRANSCRIPTIVELY. adv. [from transcript]. In manner of a copy.
Not a few transcriptively subscribing their names to other mens endeavours, transcribe all they have written. Brown.
TRANSCUR. v. n. [transcurro, Lat.] To run or rove to and fro.
By fixing the mind on one object, it doth not spaciote and transcur. Bacon.
TRANSCURSION. n. f. [from transcurro, Lat.] Ramble; pal-sage through; passage beyond certain limits; extraordinary deviation.
In a great whale, the sense and the affects of any one part of the body instantly make a *transcur*sion throughout the whole. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
I have briefly run over *transcur*sions, as if my pen had been posting with them. Watson's Life of Buckingham.
His philosophy gives them *transcur*sions beyond the vortex we breathe in, and leads them through others which are only known in an hypothesis. Glanville's Scip.
I am to make often *transcur*sions into the neighbouring forests as I pass along. Hovell.
If man were out of the world, who were then left to view the face of heaven, to wonder at the *transcur*sion of comets.
More's Antidote against Atheism.
TRANSE. n. f. [trans, Fr. See TRANCE]. A temporary absence of the soul; an ecstasy.
Abstract as in a trans, methought I saw,
Though sleeping, where I lay, and saw the shape
Still glorious before whom awake I stood. Milton.
TRANSELEMENTATION. n. f. [trans and element]. Change of one element into another.
Rain we allow; but if they suppose any other transelementation, it neither agrees with Moses's philosophy, nor Saint Peter's. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.
TRANSEXION. n. f. [trans and sexus, Lat.] Change from one sex to another.
It much impeacheth the iterated transexion of hares, if that be true which some physicians affirm, that transmutation of sexes was only so in opinion, and that those transfigured persons were really men at first. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
TRANSFER. v. a. [transferre, Fr. transfers, Lat.]
1. To convey, or make over, from one to another.
He that transfers the laws of the Lacedemonians to the people of Athens, should find a great absurdity and inconvenience. Spenser's State of Ireland.
Was't not enough you took my crown away,
But cruelly you must my love betray?
I was well pleas'd to have transferr'd my right,
And better chang'd your claim of lawless might. Dryden.
The king,
Who from himself all envy would remove,
Left both to be determin'd by the laws,
And to the Grecian chiefs transferr'd the cause. Dryden.
This was one perverse effect of their sitting at ease under their vines and fig-trees, that they forget from whence that ease came, and transferr'd all the honour of it upon themselves. Asterbury's Sermons.
Your sacred aid religious monarchs own,
When first they merit, then ascend the throne:
But tyrants dread you, lest your just decree
Transfer the power and fet the people free.
By reading we learn not only the actions and the sentiments of distant nations, but transfer to ourselves the knowledge and improvements of the most learned men. Watts.

TRA

2. To remove; to transport. Arbutnot.
The king was much moved with this unexpected accident, because it was stirred in such a place where he could not with safety transfer his own person to suppress it. Bacon's H. VII.
He thirty rowling years the crown shall wear.
Then from Lavinium shall the feat transfer. Dryden.
TRANSFIGURATION. n. f. [transfiguration, Fr.]
1. Change of form. Arbutnot.
In kinds where the discrimination of sexes is obscure, these transformations are more common, and in some without commixture; as in caterpillars or silkworms, wherein there is a visible and triple transfiguration. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
2. The miraculous change of our blessed Saviour's appearance on the mount.
It cannot be expected that other authors should mention particulars which were transacted amongst some of the disciples; such as the transfiguration and the agony in the garden. Addis.
Did Raphael's pencil never chafe to fall?
Say, are his works transfigurations all? Blackmore.
To TRANSFIGURE. v. a. [transfigure, French; trans and figura, Lat.] To transfigure; to change with respect to outward appearance.
Jesus was transfigured before them, and his face did shine as the sun, and his raiment was white as the light. Matth.
I am the more zealous to transfigure your love into devotion, because I have observed your passion to have been extremely impatient of confinement. Boyle.
The nuptial right his outrage strait attends,
The dow'r desir'd is his transfigur'd friends:
The incantation backward the repeats,
Inverts her rod, and what she did defeats. Garth.
To TRANSFIGURE. v. a. [transfigure, French; trans and figura, Lat.] To pierce through.
Amongst these mighty men were women mix'd;
The bold Semiramis, whose sides transfix'd
With son's own blade, her soul reproaches spoke. Fa. Qu.
With linked thunderbolts Transfix us to the bottom of this gulph. Milton's P. Lost.
Diana's dart
In an unhappy chace transfix'd her heart. Dryden's Homer.
Nor good Eurytion envy'd him the prize,
Though he transfix'd the pigeon in the skies. Dryden.
Till fate shall with a single dart
Transfix the pair it cannot part. Fenton.
To TRANSFORM. v. a. [transformer, Fr. trans and forma, Latin.] To metamorphose; to change with regard to external form.
She demanded of him, whether the goddess of those woods had such a power to transform every-body. Sidney, b. i.
Love is blind, and lovers cannot see
The pretty follies that themselves commit;
For if they could, Cupid himself would blush
To see me thus transform'd to a boy. Shakespeare.
As is the fable of the lady fair,
Which for her lust was turn'd into a cow;
When thirty to a stream she did repair,
And saw herself transform'd the wift not how. Davies.
To TRANSFORM. v. n. To be metamorphosed.
His hair transforms to down, his fingers meet
In skinny films and shape his oary feet. Addison.
TRANSFORMATION. n. f. [from transform.] Change of shape; act of changing the form; state of being changed with regard to form.
Something you have heard
Of Hamlet's transformation; so I call it,
Since not th' exterior, nor the inward man, Remembers that it was. Shakespeare. Hamlet.
What beast could'st thou be, that were not subject to a beast?
And what a beast art thou already, and feest not thy loss in transformation! Shakespeare. Timon of Athens.
The mensuration of all manner of curves, and their mutual transformation, are not worth the labour of those who design either of the three learned professions. Watts.
TRANSPERATION. n. f. [trans and perum, Latin.] Passage over the sea.
Since the last transperation of king Richard the second, the crown of England never sent over numbers of men sufficient to defend the small territory. Davies on Ireland.
To TRANSFUSE. v. a. [transfusio, Lat.] To pour out of one into another.
Between men and beasts there is no possibility of social communion; because the well-spring of that communion is a natural delight which man hath to transfuse from himself into others, and to receive from others into himself, especially those things wherein the excellency of this kind doth most consist. Hooker, b. i.
Transfus'd on thee his ample spirit rests.
When did his muse from Fletcher scenes purloin,
As thou whose Eth'ridge dost transfuse to thine?
But to transfus'd, as oil and waters flow,

TRA

- Where the juices are in a morbid state, if one could suppose all the unsound juices taken away and sound juices immediately transfused, the sound juices would grow morbid. Arbutnot.
TRANSFUSION. n. f. [transfusio, Fr. transfusio, Lat.] The act of pouring out of one into another.
The crooked part of the pipe was placed in a box, to prevent the loss of the quicksilver that might fall aside in the transfusion from the vessel into the pipe. Boyle.
Poetry is of so subtle a spirit, that in the pouring out of one language into another it will all evaporate; and if a new spirit be not added in the transfusion, there will remain nothing but a caput mortuum. Denham.
Something must be lost in all transfusion, that is, in all translations, but the sense will remain. Dryden.
What noise have we had about transplantation of ducats and transfusion of blood. Baker's Reflections on Learning.
To TRANSFUSE. v. a. [transfusio, French; transfusio, Latin.]
1. To pass over; to pass beyond.
Long stood the noble youth oppress'd with awe,
And stupid at the wondrous things he saw,
Surpassing common faith, transgressing nature's law. Dryd.
2. To violate; to break.
Let no man doubt but that every thing is well done, because the world is ruled by so good a guide as transgresseth not his own law, than which nothing can be more absolute, perfect, and just. Hooker, b. i.
This forrow we must repeat as often as we transgress the divine commandments. Wake's Preparation for Death.
To TRANSGRESS. v. n. To offend by violating a law.
I would not marry her, though she were endowed with all Adam had left him before he transgressed. Shakespeare.
Achan transgress'd in the thing accursed. 1 Chron. ii. 7.
He upbraided us with our offending the law, and objecteth to our infamy the transgressings of our education. Widd.
TRANSGRESSION. n. f. [transgressio, Fr. from transgre, gre, Latin.]
1. Violation of a law; breach of a command.
Shall I abuse this consecrated gift
Of strength, again returning with my hair
After my great transgression: to requite Favour renew'd, and add a greater sin. Milton.
All accusation fill is founded upon some law; for where there is no law, there can be no transgression; and where there can be no transgression, there ought to be no accusation. South's Sermons.
2. Offence; crime; fault.
What's his fault?
—The flat transgression of a school-boy, who, being overjoy'd with finding a bird's nest, shews it his companion, and he steals it.
—Will thou make a trust a transgression? The transgression is in the stealer. Shakespeare. Much ado about nothing.
Teach us, sweet madam, for our rude transgression
Some fair excuse. Shakespeare. Love's Labour lost.
TRANSGRESSIVE. adj. [from transgre, gre, Latin.] Faulty; apt to break laws.
Though permitted unto his proper principles, Adam perhaps would have sinned without the suggestion of Satan, and from the transgressive infirmities of himself might have erred alone, as well as the angels before him. Brown.
TRANSGRESSOR. n. f. [transgressio, French, from transgre, gre, Latin.] Lawbreaker; violator of command; offender.
He intended the discipline of the church should be applied to the greatest and most splendid transgressors, as well as to the punishment of meaner offenders. Clarendon.
I go to judge
On earth these thy transgressors; but thou know'st
Whoever judg'd, the worst on me must light
When time shall be. Milton's Par. Lost, b. x.
Ill-worthy I, such title should belong
To me transgressor! who for thee ordain'd
A help, became thy snare. Milton's Par. Lost, b. xi.
TRANSLATION. n. f. [translatio, Lat.] Soon past; soon passing; short; momentary; not lasting; not durable.
How soon hath thy prediction, fear blest!
Measur'd this transient world, the race of time,
Till time stand fix'd. Milton.
He that rides post through a country, may, from the transient view, tell how in general the parts lie. Locke.
Love hitherto a transient guest,
Ne'er held possession in his breast.
What is loose love? a transient guest, and soon to move.
A vapour fed from wild desire. Pope.
TRANSLATION. adv. [from translatio.] In passage; with a short passage; not extensively.
I touch here but transiently, without any strict method, on some few of those many rules of imitating nature which Aristotle drew from Homer. Dryden.
TRANSLATION. n. f. [from translatio.] Shortness of continuance; speedy passage.
It were to be wished that all words of this sort, as they resemble the wind in fury and impetuosity, so they might do also in transience and sudden expiration. Dec. of Pity.
TRANSLIENCY. n. f. [from translatio, Lat.] Leap from thing to thing.
By unadvised transliency leaping from the effect to its remotest cause, we observe not the connection of more immediate causalities. Glanville's Scep.
TRANSLIT. n. f. [translitio, Latin.] In astronomy, the passing of any planet just by or under any fixed star; or of the moon in particular, covering or moving close by any other planet. Harris.
TRANSLITION. n. f. [translatio, Latin.]
1. Removal; passage.
Heat and cold have a virtual translation without communication of substance, but moisture not. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
As for the mutation of sexes, and translation into one another, we cannot deny it in hares, it being observable in man. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. iii.
I have given some intimations of the changes which happen in the interior parts of the earth, I mean the translations and removes of metals and minerals there. Woodward.
2. Change.
The spots are of the same colour throughout, there being an immediate translation from white to black, and not declining gradually, and mixing as they approach. Woodward.
You can scarce imagine any hero passing from one stage of life to another with so easy a translation, and so laudable a behaviour. Pope.
As once inclos'd in woman's beauteous mould;
Thence, by a soft translation we repair,
From earthly vehicles to these of air. Pope.
3. Translation, Fr.] Passage in writing or conversation from one subject to another.
Then with translation sweet new speech resumes. Milton.
Covetousness was none of his faults, but described as a veil over the true meaning of the poet, which was to satirize his prodigality and voluptuousness, to which he makes a translation. Dryden.
TRANSLATIVE. adj. [translativus, Lat.]
1. Having the power of passing.
One cause of cold is the contact of cold bodies; for cold is active and translatable into bodies adjacent, as well as heat. Bacon's Nat. Hist. No. 70.
2. [In grammar.]
A verb translatable is that which signifies an action, conceived as having an effect upon some object; as serio terram, I strike the earth. Clarke's Latin Grammar.
TRANSLATORILY. adv. [from translatio.] With speedy evanescence; with short continuance.
TRANSLATORINESS. n. f. [from translatio.] Speedy evanescence.
TRANSLATORY. n. f. [translatore, Fr. translatore, from translatio, Latin.] Continuing but a short time; speedily vanishing.
If we love things have fought; age is a thing
Which we are fifty years in compassing:
If transitory things, which soon decay,
Age must be loveless at the latest day. Donne.
Religion prefers those pleasures which flow from the presence of God evermore, infinitely before the transitory pleasures of this world. Tillotson's Sermons.
To TRANSLATE. v. n. [translatio, Lat.]
1. To transport; to remove.
Since our father is translated unto the gods, our will is that they that are in our realm live quietly. 2 Mac. xi. 23.
By faith Enoch was translated that he should not see death. Heb. xi. 5.
Those argent fields
Translated saints or middle spirits hold. Milton.
Of the same soil their nursery prepare
With that of their plantation, lest the tree
Translated should not with the soil agree. Dryden.
The gods their shapes to winter birds translate,
But both obnoxious to their former fate. Dryden.
To go to heaven is to be translated to that kingdom you have longed for; to enjoy the glories of eternity. Wake.
2. It is particularly used of the removal of a bishop from one see to another.
Fisher, bishop of Rochester, when the king would have translated him from that poor bishoprick to a better, he refused, saying, he would not forsake his poor little old wife, with whom he had so long lived. Canden's Remains.
3. To transfer from one to another; to convey.
I will translate the kingdom from the house of Saul, and set up the throne of David. 2 Sam. iii. 10.
Because of unrighteous dealings the kingdom is translated from one people to another. Ecclus. x. 8.
Lucian affirms the souls of usurers, after their death, to be metemorphosed, or translated into the bodies of asses, there to remain for poor men to take their pennyworths out of their bones and fides with the cudgel and spur. Peacham.
As there are apoplexies from inveterate gouts, the regimen

TRA

- must be to translate the morbid matter upon the extremities of the body. Arbutnot.
Perverse mankind! whose wills, created free,
Charge all their woes on absolute decree;
All to the dooming gods their guilt translate,
And follies are miscall'd the crimes of fate. Pope.
To change.
One do I personate of Timon's frame,
Whom fortune with her iv'ry hand waits to her,
Whose present grace to present slaves and servants Translates his rivals. Shakespeare. Timon of Athens.
Happy is your grace,
That can translate the stubbornness of fortune
Into so quiet and so sweet a style. Shakespeare. As you like it.
[Translator, old Fr.] To interpret in another language; to change into another language retaining the sense.
I can contrive the action of her familiar stile, and the hardest voice of her behaviour, to be englished right, is, I am Sir John Falstaff's.
—He hath studied her well, and translated her out of homely into English. Shakespeare. Merry Wives of Windsor.
Nor word for word too faithfully translate. Rafcommen.
Read this ere you translate one bit
Of books of high renown. Swift.
Were it meant that in despite of fate
Of art and nature such dull clouds should write,
Bavius and Mævius had been fav'd by fate, and not declin'd.
For Settle and for Shadwell to translate. Duke.
To explain. A low colloquial use.
There's matter in these sighs, these profound heaves
You must translate; 'tis fit we understand them. Shakespeare.
TRANSLATION. n. f. [translatio, Lat. translatio, Fr.]
1. Removal; act of removing.
His disease was an asthma; the cause a metastasis or translation of humours from his joints to his lungs. Harvey.
Translations of morbid matter arise in acute distempers. Arbutnot.
2. The removal of a bishop to another see.
If part of the people be somewhat in the election, you cannot make them nulls or cyphers in the privation or translation. Bacon's War with Spain.
The king, the next time the bishop of London came to him, entertained him with this compellation, my lord's grace of Canterbury, you are very welcome; and gave order for all the necessary forms for the translation. Clarendon.
3. The act of turning into another language; interpretation.
A book of his travels hath been honoured with translation into many languages. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. i.
Nor ought a genius less than his that writ,
Attempt translation; for transplanted wit,
All the defects of air and soil doth share,
And colder brains like colder climates are. Denham.
4. Something made by translation; version.
Of both translations, the better I acknowledge that which cometh nearer to the very letter of the very original verity. Hooker, b. v.
TRANSLATOR. n. f. [translatores, old Fr. from translatio.] One that turns any thing into another language.
A new and nobler way thou dost pursue,
To make translations and translators too. Denham.
No translation our own country ever yet produced, hath come up to that of the Old and New Testament; and I am persuaded, that the translators of the Bible were masters of an English stile much fitter for that work than any we see in our present writings, the which is owing to the simplicity that runs through the whole. Swift.
TRANSLATORY. n. f. [from translatio.] Transferring.
The translatory is a lie that transfers the merit of a man's good action to another more deserving. Arbutnot.
TRANSLLOCATION. n. f. [trans and locus, Latin.] Removal of things reciprocally to each others places.
There happened certain translocations at the deluge, the matter constituting animal and vegetable substances being dissolved, and mineral matter substituted in its place, and thereby like translocation of metals in some springs. Woodward.
TRANSLUCENCY. n. f. [from translucens.] Diaphaneity; transparency.
Lumps of rock crystal heated red hot, then quenched in fair water, exchanged their translucency for whiteness; the ignition and extinction having cracked each lump into a multitude of minute bodies. Boyle on Colours.
TRANSLUCENT. adj. [trans and lucens or lucidus Lat.] TRANSLUCID. } Transparent; diaphanous; clear; giving a passage to the light.
In anger the spirits ascend and wax eager; which is seen in the eyes, because they are translucent. Bacon.
Wherever fountain or fresh current flow'd
Against the eastern ray, translucent, pure,
With touch æthereal of heav'n's fiery rod,
I drank. Milton.
The golden ewer a maid obsequious brings,
Replenish'd from the cool translucent springs. Pope's Ody.

To TRANSMIGRATE. v. n. [transmigro, Lat.] To pass from one place or country into another.

This complexion is maintain'd by generation; so that strangers contract it not, and the natives which transmigrate omit it not without commixture. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

If Pythagoras's transmigration were true, that the souls of men transmigrating into species answering their former natures, some men must live over many serpents. Brown's Vulg. Err.
Their souls may transmigrate into each other. Howel.

Regard
The port of Luna, says our learned bard;
Who, in a drunken dream, beheld his soul
The fifth within the transmigrating roll. Dryden.

TRANSMIGRATION. n. f. [transmigration, Fr. from transmigrare.] Passage from one place or state into another.

The sequel of the conjunction of natures in the person of Christ is no abolishment of natural properties appertaining to either substance, no transition or transmigration thereof out of one substance into another. Hosker, b. v.

Seeing the earth of itself puts forth plants without seed, plants may well have a transmigration of species. Bacon.

From the opinion of the metempsychosis, or transmigration of the souls of men into the bodies of beasts, most suitable unto their human condition, after his death, Orpheus the musician became a swan. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

Easing their passage hence, for intercourse
Of transmigration, as their lot shall lead. Milton.

'Twas taught by wife Pythagoras,
One soul might through more bodies pass;
Seeing such transmigration there,
She thought it not a fable here. Denham.

When thou wert form'd, heav'n did a man begin,
But the brute soul by chance was flung in:
In woods and wilds thy monarchy maintain,
Where valiant beasts, by force and rapine, reign.
In life's next scene, if transmigration be,
Some bear or lion is reserv'd for thee. Dryden's Aureng.

TRANSMISSION. n. f. [transmissio, Fr. transmissus, Latin.] The act of sending from one place to another, or from one person to another.

 be the cock's sperm. De Ham.
TREASON. n. f. [trahison, French.] An offence committed against the dignity and majesty of the commonwealth: it is divided into high treason and petit treason. High treason is an offence against the security of the commonwealth, or of the king's majesty, whether by imagination, word, or deed;
 as to compass or imagine treason, or the death of the prince, or the queen consort, or his son and heir-apparent; or to de-flower the king's wife, or his eldest daughter unmarried, or his eldest son's wife; or levy war against the king in his realm, or to adhere to his enemies by aiding them; or to counterfeite the king's great seal, privy seal, or money; or knowingly to bring false money into this realm counterfeited like the money of England, and to utter the same; or to kill the king's chancellor, treasurer, justice of the one bench, or of the other; justices in Eyre, justices of assize, justices of oyer and terminer, when in their place and doing their duty; or forging the king's seal manual, or privy signet; or diminishing or impairing the current money; and, in such treason, a man forfeits his lands and goods to the king; and it is called treason paramount. Petit treason is when a servant kills his master, a wife her husband; secular or religious kills his prelate: this treason gives forfeiture to every lord within his own fee: both treasons are capital.
 Man disobeying,
 Disloyal breaks his fealty, and sins
 Against the high supremacy of heaven. Milton.
 To expiate his treason hath nought left.
 He made the overture of thy treason to us. Shakespeare.

 into matters: now such professions, when recommended by a treat, dispose an audience to hear reason. Collier.

TRE

What tender maid but must a victim fall
 For one man's treat, but for another's ball? Pope.
 2. Something given at an entertainment.
 Dry figs and grapes, and wrinkled dates were set,
 In canisters to enlarge the little treat. Dryden.
 The King of gods revolving in his mind
 Lycan's guilt and his inhuman treat. Dryden.
TREATABLE. adj. [tratable, Fr.] Moderate; not violent.
 A virtuous mind should rather wish to depart this world with a kind of treatable dissolution, than be suddenly cut off in a moment, rather to be taken than snatched away. Hooker.
 The heats or the colds of seasons are less treatable than with us. Temple.
TREATISE. n. f. [tractatus, Latin.] Discourse; written tractate.
 The time has been my fell of hair
 Wou'd at a dismal treatise rouse, and stir
 As life were in't. Shakespeare.
 Besides the rules given in this treatise to make a perfect judgment of good pictures, there is required a long conversation with the best pieces. Dryden's Dunciad.
TREATMENT. n. f. [traitement, French.] Usage; manner of using good or bad.
 Scarce an humour or character which they have not used;
 all comes wasted to us: and were they to entertain this age,
 they could not now make such plenteous treatment. Dryden.
 Accept such treatment as a swain affords. Pope.
TREATY. n. f. [traité, Fr.]
 1. Negotiation; act of treating.
 She began a treaty to procure;
 And stablish terms betwixt both their requests. Pa. Qu.

 Fr.] To multiply by three; to make thrice as much.
 She conceiv'd, and trebling the due time,
 Brought forth this monstrous mass. Spenser.
 I would not be ambitious in my wish,
 To wish myself much better; yet for you,
 I would be trebled twenty times myself,
 A thousand times more fair. Shakespeare, Merch. of Venice.
 Aquarius shines with feeble rays,
 Four years he trebles, and doubles six score days. Creech.
 To TREBLE. v. n. To become threefold.
 Whoever annually runs out, as the debt doubles and trebles upon him, so doth his inability to pay it. Swift.
TREBLE. n. f. A sharp sound.
 The treble cutteth the air so sharp, as it returneth too swift to make the sound equal; and therefore a mean or tenor is the sweetest. Bacon.
 The lute still trembles underneath thy nail:
 At thy well-sharpen'd thumb from shore to shore,
 The trebles squeak for fear, the bases roar. Dryden.
TREBLENESS. n. f. [from treble]. The state of being treble.
 The just proportion of the air percussed towards the base-ness or trebleness of tones, is a great secret in sounds. Bacon.
TREBLE. adv. [from treble]. Thrice told; in threefold number or quantity.

Sometime we see a cloud that's dragonish,
 A forked mountain, or blue promontory
 With trees upon't, that nod unto the world,
 And mock our eyes with air. Shakep. Ant. and Cleopatra.
 Who can bid the tree unfix his earth-bound root. Shak.
 It is pleasant to look upon a tree in Summer covered with green leaves, decked with blossoms, or laden with fruit, and casting a pleasant shade: but to consider how this tree sprang from a little seed, how nature shaped and fed it till it came to this greatness, is a more rational pleasure. Burnet.
 Trees shoot up in one great stem, and at a good distance from the earth, spread into branches: thus gooseberries are shrubs, and oaks are trees. Locke.

2. Any thing branched out.
 Vain are their hopes who fancy to inherit,
 By trees of pedigree, or fame or merit:
 Though plodding heralds through each branch may trace Old captains and dictators of their race. Dryden.
 TREE gemander. n. f. A plant.
 TREE of life. n. f. [lignum vitæ, Latin.] An evergreen: the wood is esteemed by turners. Miller.
 TREE pin ofe. n. f. A plant.
 TREEN. old plur. of tree.

Well run greenhood, got between Under the sand-bag he was seen;
 Lowling low like a forster green,
 He knows his tackle and his treen. Benj. Johnson.
 TREEN. adj. Wooden; made of wood. Obsolete.
 Sir Thomas Rookesby, being controlled for first suffering himself to be served in treen cups, answered, these homely cups pay truly for that they contain: I had rather drink out of treen and pay gold and silver, than drink out of gold and silver and make wooden payments. Camden.

TREFOIL. n. f. [trifolium, Latin.] A plant.
 The trefoil hath a papilionaceous flower, consisting of the standard, the wings and keel coming out of the empalement together with the point covered with its fringed sheath: it becomes a capsule hidden in the empalement, and full of seeds shaped like a kidney, adhering close to the capsule when ripe: some have flowers consisting of one leaf, and filled with kidney-shaped seeds: to this must be added, that the leaves grow by threes, seldom by four or fives, on a common footstalk. Miller.

Hope, by the ancients, was drawn in the form of a sweet and beautiful child, standing upon tiptoes, and a trefoil, or three-leaved grass in her hand. Peacocks on D'aving.
 Some few trefoil or rye-grass with their clover. Mortimer.
 TRELLAGE. n. f. [French.]
 Trellage is a contexture of pales to support espaliers, making a distinct inclosure of any part of a garden. Trevous.
 There are as many kinds of gardening as of poetry: makers of flower-gardens are epigrammatists and sonnetiers, contrivers of bowers, grotto's, trellages, and cascades, are romance writers. Spectator, No. 477.

TRELLIS. n. f. [French.] Is a structure of iron, wood, or other, the parts crossing each other like a lattice. Trevous.
 To TREMBLE. v. n. [tremble, Fr. tremo, Lat.]

 And make your bondmen tremble. Shakep. Julius Caesar.
 This judgment of the heavens that makes us tremble, Touches us not with pity. Shakep. King Lear.
 They shall fear and tremble. Jer. xxxiii. 9.
 When he heard the king, he fell into such a trembling that he could hardly speak.
 Frighted Turnus trembl'd as he spoke.
 He shook the sacred honours of his head,
 With terror trembl'd heavy n's subsiding hill,
 And from his shaken curls ambrosial dews distil. Dryden.
 Ye powers, revenge your violated altars,
 That they who with unhallow'd hands approach
 May tremble. Dryden's Æn.

2. To quiver; to totter.
 Sinai's grey top shall tremble.
 We cannot imagine a mass of water to have stood upon the middle of the earth like one great drop, or a trembling jelly, and all the places about it dry. Milton.
 3. To quaver; to shake as a found.
 Winds make a noise unequally, and sometimes when vehement tremble at the height of their blast. Bacon.
 TREMBLINGLY. adv. [from trembling.] So as to shake or quiver.

Tremblingly the flood,
 And on the sudden dropt. Shakep. Ant. and Cleopatra.
 Say what the life, were finer optics giv'n,
 Or touch, if tremblingly alive all o'er,
 To smart and agonize at every pore? Pope.
 TREMENDOUS. adj. [tremendus, Latin.] Dreadful; horrible; astonishingly terrible.
 There stands an altar where the priest celebrates some mysteries sacred and tremendous. Tatler, No. 57.

In that portal shou'd the chief appear,
 Each hand tremendous with a brazen spear. Pope's Odyssey.
 TREMOUR. n. f. [tremor, Lat.]
 1. The state of trembling.
 He fell into an universal tremour of all his joints, that when going his legs trembled under him. Harvey.
 By its syzytick and stimulating quality it affects the nerves, occasioning tremours. Arbutnot on Aliments.

2. Quivering or vibratory motion.
 These stars do not twinkle when viewed through telescopes which have large apertures: for the rays of light which pass through divers parts of the aperture tremble each of them apart, and by means of their various, and sometimes contrary tremours fall at one and the same time upon different points in the bottom of the eye. Newton.
 TREMULOUS. adj. [tremulus, Lat.]
 1. Trembling; fearful.
 The tender tremulous christian is easily distracted and amazed by them. Decay of Piety.

2. Quivering; vibratory.
 Breath vocalized, that is, vibrated or undulated, imprefes a swift tremulous motion in the lips, tongue or palate, which breath passing smooth does not. Hiller.
 As thus th' effulgence tremulous I drink,
 The lambent lightnings shoot across the sky. Thomson.
 TREMULOUSNESS. n. f. [from tremulous.] The state of quivering.

TREN. n. f. A fish spear.
 To TRENCH. v. a. [trencher, Fr.]

 Safe in a ditch he bides,
 With twenty trenched gashes on his head. Shakespeare.
 This weak impress of love is as a figure Trench'd in ice, which with an hour's heat
 Dissolves to water, and doth lose his form. Shakespeare.

2. To cut or dig into pits or ditches.
 Pioneers with spades and pickaxe arm'd,
 Forerun the royal camp to trench a field. Milton.
 Trench the ground, and make it ready for the Spring. Locke.
 First draw thy faultchion, and on ev'ry side
 Trench the black earth a cubit long and wide. Pope.
 The trenching plough or coulter is useful in pasture-ground, to cut out the fides of trenches or drains. Mortimer.

TRENCH. n. f. [trenches, Fr.]
 1. A pit or ditch.
 On that coast build
 And with a trench enclose the fruitful field. Dryden's Æn.
 When you have got your water up to the highest part of the land, make a small trench to carry some of the water in, keeping it always upon a level. Mortimer's Hagb.
 2. Earth thrown up to defend soldiers in their approach to a town, or to guard a camp.

TRE

The citizens of Corioli have lifted forth
 And given to Lartius and to Marcius battle;
 I saw our party to the trenches driven,
 And then I came away. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.
 William carries on the trench.
 Till both the town and castle yield. Prior.
 TRE'SCHANT. adj. [trenchant, Fr.] Cutting; sharp.
 He fiercely took his trenchant blade in hand,
 With which he struck so furious and so fell,
 That nothing seem'd the puissance could withstand. F. 2.
 Against a vanquish'd foe, their swords
 Were sharp and trenchant, not their words. Hudibras.

TRE'NCHE. n. f. [from trench; trenchoir, Fr.]
 1. A piece of wood on which meat is cut at table.
 No more
 I'll scrape trencher, nor wash dish. Shakep. Tempest.
 My estate deserves an heir more rais'd,
 Than one which holds a trencher. Shak. Timon of Athens.
 When we find our dogs, we let the dish or trencher on the ground.
 Their homely fare dispatch'd; the hungry band
 Invade their trenchers next, and soon devour. Dryden.
 Many a child may have the idea of a square trencher, or round plate, before he has any idea of infinite. Locke.

2. The table.
 How often hast thou,
 Fed from my trencher, kneel'd down at the board,
 When I have feasted. Shakep. Henry VI.
 3. Food; pleasures of the table.
 It could be no ordinary declension of nature that could bring some men, after an ingenious education, to place their summa bonum upon their trenchers, and their utmost felicity in wine. South's Sermons.

TRE'NCHEFLY. n. f. [trencher and fly.] One that haunts tables; a parasite.
 He found all people came to him promiscuously, and he tried which of them were friends, and which only trencher-fles and spongers. Levi's Sermons.
 TRE'NCHEMAN. n. f. [trencher and man.] A feeder; an eater.
 Palladius assured him, that he had already been more fed to his liking than he could be by the skillfullest trenchermen of Media. Sidney.
 You had musty victuals, and he hath help to eat it: he's a very valiant trencherman; he hath an excellent stomach. Shakep. Much ado about nothing.

TRE'NCHEMATE. n. f. [trencher and mate.] A table companion; a parasite.
 Because that judicious learning of the ancient sages doth not in this case serve the turn, these trencher-mates frame to themselves a way more pleasant; a new method they have of turning things that are serious into mockery, an art of contradiction by way of scorn. Hooker, b. v.
 To TREND. v. n. To tend; to lie in any particular direction. It seems a corruption of tend.

The scouts to several parts divide their way,
 To learn the natives names, their towns explore
 The coasts and trendings of the crooked shore. Dryden.

 They trepain'd the state, and fac'd it down
 With plots and projects of our own. Hudibras, p. iii.

Those are but trepain'd who are called to govern, being invested with authority but bereaved of power, which is nothing else but to mock and betray them into a splendid and magisterial way of being ridiculous. South's Sermons.

TRE

TREPINE. n. f. A small trepan; a smaller instrument of perforation managed by one hand.
 I shew'd a trepan and trephine, and gave them liberty to try both upon a skull. Wise's Surgery.

TREPIDATION. n. f. [trepidatio, Lat.]
 1. The state of trembling.
 The bow tortureth the string continually, and holdeth it in a continual trepidation. Bacon's Nat. Hist. No. 137.
 All objects of the senses which are very offensive, cause the spirits to retire; upon which the parts, in some degree, are destitute; and so there is induced in them a trepidation and horror. Bacon's Nat. Hist. No. 793.

Moving of th' earth brings harms and fears,
 Men reckon what it did and meant;
 But trepidation of the spheres,
 Though greater far, is innocent. Dante.
 They pass the planets sev'n, and pass the fix'd,
 And that crystalline sphere whose balance weighs
 The trepidation talk'd, and that first-mov'd. Milton.

2. State of terror.
 Because the whole kingdom stood in a zealous trepidation of the absence of such a prince, I have been the more desirous to research the several passages of the journey. Watson.
 His first action of note was in the battle of Lepanto; where the success of that great day, in such trepidation of the state, made every man meritorious. Watson.
 To TREPASS. v. n. [trepasser, Fr.]

1. To transgress; to offend.
 If they shall confess their trespasss which they trepassed against me, I will remember my covenant. Lev. xxvi. 43.
 They not only contradict the general design and particular exprefes of the gospel, but trepass against all logick. Norris.
 2. To enter unlawfully on another's ground.
 Their morals and economy,
 Most perfectly they made agree:
 Each virtue kept its proper bound,
 Nor trepass'd on the other's ground. Prior.

TRE'PASS. n. f. [trepass, Fr.]
 1. Transgression; offence.
 Your purpos'd low correction
 Is such, as bafeit, and the meanest wretches
 For pil' rings, and most common trepasses
 Are punish'd with. Shakep. King Lear.
 The trepass money and sin money was the priests. 2 Kings.
 He shall bring his trepass offering for his sin. Lev. v. 6.
 Will God incense his ire
 For such a petty trepass? Milton.

2. Unlawful entrance on another's ground.
 TRE'PASSER. n. f. [from trepass.]
 1. An offender; a transgressor.
 2. One who enters unlawfully on another's ground.
 If I come upon another's ground without his licence, or the licence of the law, I am a trepasser, for which the owner may have an action of trespass against me. Watson.
 TRE'SSED. adj. [from treffe, French.] Knotted or curled.
 Nor this nor that so much doth make me mourn,
 But for the lad, whom long I lov'd so dear,
 Now loves a lass that all his love doth scorn,
 He plunged in pain his treffed locks doth tear. Spenser.

TRE'SSES. n. f. without a singular. [treffe, Fr. treccia, Italian.] A knot or curl of hair.
 Hung be the heav'n's with black, yield day to night!
 Comets, importing change of times and states,
 Brandish your crystal treffes in the sky. Shakespeare.
 Naked, met his under the flowing gold
 Of her loose treffes hid. Milton.

Adam had wove
 Of choicest flow'rs a garland to adorn
 Her treffes, and her rural labours crown. Milton.
 Fair treffes man's imperial race ensnare,
 And beauty draws us with a single hair. Pope.
 Then cease, bright nymph! to mourn the ravish'd hair,
 Which adds new glory to the shining sphere!
 Not all the treffes that fair hair can boast,
 Shall draw such envy as the lock you lost. Pope.

TRE'STLE. n. f. [treseau, Fr.]
 1. The frame of a table.
 2. A moveable form by which any thing is supported.
 TRET. n. f. [Probably from tritius, Lat.] An allowance made by merchants to retailers, which is four pounds in every hundred weight, and four pounds for waste or refuse of a commodity. Boileau.

 TRYABLE.

TRI

TRIABLE, adj. [from try.]
1. Possible to be experimented; capable of trial.
For the more easy understanding of the experiments triable by our engine, I insinuated that notion, by which all of them will prove explicable. Boyle.
2. Such as may be judicially examined.
No one should be admitted to a bishop's chancellorship without good knowledge in the civil and canon laws, since divers causes triable in the spiritual court are of weight. Ayliffe.
TRIAD, n. f. [trias, Lat. triade, Fr.] Three united.
TRIAL, n. f. [from try.]
1. Test; examination.
With trial fire touch me his finger end;
If he be chaste the flame will back descend,
And turn him to no pain; but if he start,
It is the flesh of a corrupted heart. Shakespeare.
2. Experience; act of examining by experience.
I leave him to your gracious acceptance,
Whose trial shall better publish his commendation. Shak.
Skillful gardeners make trial of the seeds by putting them into water gently boiled; and if good, they will sprout within half an hour. Bacon's Nat. Hist. N^o. 520.
3. Experiment; experimental knowledge.
Others had trial of cruel mockings and scourgings. Heb.
4. Judicial examination.
Trial is used in law for the examination of all causes, civil or criminal, according to the laws of our realm: the trial is the issue, which is tried upon the indictment, not the indictment itself. Cowell.
He hath resisted law,
And therefore law shall scorn him further trial
Than the severity of public power. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.
5. Temptation; test of virtue.
Left our trial, when least fought,
May find us both perhaps far less prepar'd,
The willing I go. Milton's Par. Lost, b. ix.
No such company as then thou saw'st Intended thee; for trial only brought,
To see how thou could'st judge of fit and meet. Milton.
Every station is expos'd to some trials, either temptations that provoke our appetites, or disquiet our fears. Rogers.
6. State of being tried.
Good shepherd, tell this youth what 'tis to love?
—It is to be all made of sighs and tears;
It is to be made all of faith and service,
All humbleness, all patience and impatience;
All purity, all trial, all observance. Shakespeare's As you like it.
TRIANGLE, n. f. [triangle, Fr. triangulum, Lat.] A figure of three angles.
The three angles of a triangle are equal to two right ones. Locke.
TRIANGULAR, adj. [triangularis, Lat.] Having three angles.
The frame thereof seem'd partly circular,
And part triangular; O work divine!
These two the first and last proportions are. Fairy Qu.
Though a round figure be most capacious for the honey,
And most convenient for the bee; yet did the not chuse that,
Because then there must have been triangular spaces left void. Ray on the Creation.
TRIBE, n. f. [tribu, Fr. tribus, Lat. from treu, b and v being labials of promiscuous use in the ancient British words; treu from tir, his lands, is supposed to be Celtic, and used before the Romans had any thing to do with the British government; to prove which Mr. Rowland offers many reasons, which he mentions by imagining that centuria is derived from treu, supposing it to be the same with our centrev, importing a hundred treus or tribes.]
1. A distinct body of the people as divided by family or fortune, or any other characteristic.
I ha' been writing all this night unto all the tribes
And centuries for their voices, to help Catiline
In his election. Benj. Johnson's Cataline.
If the heads of the tribes can be taken off, and the milled multitude will see their error, such extent of mercy is honourable. Bacon's Advice to Villiers.
Who now shall rear you to the sun, or rank
Your tribes, and water from th' ambrosial fount. Milton.
Straggling mountaineers, for public good,
To rank in tribes, and quit the savage wood,
Houses to build. Tate.
I congratulate my country upon the increase of this happy tribe of men, since, by the present parliament, the race of freeholders is spreading into the remotest corners. Addison.

TRI

The just shall dwell,
And after all their tribulations long,
See golden days, fruitful of golden deeds. Milton.
Death becomes
His final remedy; and after life
Try'd in sharp tribulation, and refin'd
By faith, and faithful works. Milton's Par. Lost, b. xi.
Our church taught us to pray, that God would, not only in all time of our tribulation, but in all time of our wealth, deliver us. Atterbury's Sermons.
TRIBUNAL, n. f. [tribunal, Latin and French].
1. The seat of a judge.
I th' market-place, on a tribunal silver'd,
Cleopatra and himself in chairs of gold
Were publicly enthron'd. Shakespeare's Anti. and Cleopatra.
He sees the room
Where the whole nation does for justice come,
Under whose large roof flourishes the gown,
And judges grave on high tribunals frown.
Here the tribunal stood. Dryden's R.
There is a necessity of standing at his tribunal, who is infinitely wife and just. Greco's Com. b. iii.
2. A court of justice.

The tongues of th' common mouth: I do despise them. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.
2. The commander of a Roman legion.
TRIBUNITIAL, adj. [tribunitius, Lat.] Suiing a tribune;
TRIBUNITIUS, adj. relating to a tribune.
Let them not come in multitudes, or in a tribunitius manner; for that is to clamour counsels, not to inform. Bacon.
Oh happy ages of our ancestors,
Beneath the kings and tribunitius powers
One jail did all their criminals restrain. Dryden's Juvenal.
TRIBUTARY, adj. [tributarius, Fr. tributarius, Lat.].
1. Paying tribute as an acknowledgement of submission to a master.
Thenceforth this land was tributary made
T' ambitious Rome, and did their rule obey,
Till Arthur all that reckoning did defray:
Yet oft the Briton kings against them strongly sway'd. Fairy Queen, b. ii.
The two great empires of the world I know;
And since the earth none larger does afford,
This Charles is some poor tributary lord. Dryden.
Around his throne the sea-born brothers stood,
That swell with tributary urns his flood. Pope.
2. Subject; subordinate.
These he, to grace his tributary gods,
By course commits to federal government,
And gives them leave to wear their sapphire crowns,
And wield their little tridents. Milton's Comus.
O'er Judah's king ten thousand tyrants reign,
Legions of lust, and various powers of ill
Insult the matter's tributary will. Prior.
3. Paid in tribute.
Nor flattery tunes these tributary lays. Concomen.
TRIBUTARY, n. f. [from tribute.] One who pays a stated sum in acknowledgement of subjection.
All the people therein shall be tributaries unto thee, and serve thee. Deut. xx. 11.
The Irish lords did only promise to become tributaries to king Henry the second: and such as only pay tribute, are not properly subjects but foreigners. Davies.
TRIBUTE, n. f. [tribut, Fr. tributum, Lat.] Payment made in acknowledgement; subjection.
The Lord's tribute of the sheep was six hundred. Numb.
They that received tribute money said, Doth not your master pay tribute? Mat. xvii. 2.
She receives
As tribute her warmth and light.
To acknowledge this was all he did exact;
Small tribute, where the will to pay was act. Dryden.
TRICOMANES, n. f. A plant.
A branch of some capillary plant, resembling the common trichomanes, only the pinnae are larger in a dusky grey flay flower. Woodward.
TRICE, n. f. [I believe this word comes from trist, Fr. corrupted by pronunciation.] A short time; an instant; a stroke.
If they get never to great spoil at any time, the same they waste in a trice, as naturally delighting in spoil, though it do themselves no good.
Just in the nick the cook knock'd thrice,
And all the waiters in a trice
His summons did obey:
Each serving man with dish in hand,
March'd boldly up like our train'd band,
Presented, and away. Swickling.
He

TRI

He could raise scruples dark and nice,
And after solve them in a trice. Hudibras, p. i.
So when the war had rais'd a storm,
I've seen a snake in human form,
All stain'd with infamy and vice,
Leap from the dunghill in a trice. Swift.
It seems incredible at first, that all the blood in our bodies should circulate in a trice, in a very few minutes; but it would be more surprising if we knew the short periods of the great circulation of water. Bentley's Sermons.
TRICOTOMY, n. f. Division into three parts.
Some disturb the order of nature by dichotomies, tricotomies, sevens, twelves: let the subject with the design you have in view determine the number of parts into which you divide it. Watts.
TRICK, n. f. [treck, Dutch].
1. A fly fraud.
Sir Thomas Moor said, that a trick of law had no less power than the wheel of fortune, to lift men up, or cast them down. Raleigh.
A bantering droll took a journey to Delphos, to try if he could put a trick upon Apollo. L'Estrange's Fables.
Such a one thinks to find some shelter in my friendship, and I betray him: he comes to me for counsel and I shew him a trick. South.
He swore by Stix,
Whate'er she would desire, to grant;
But wife Arcelia knew his tricks. Swift.
2. A dexterous artifice.
Gather the lowest and leaving the top,
Shall teach thee a trick for to double thy crop.
And now, as oft in some dissembler's state,
On one nice trick depends the general fate. Pope.
3. A vicious practice.
Suspicion shall be stuck full of eyes:
For treason is but trusted like a fox,
Who ne'er to tame, to cherish'd and lock'd up,
Will have a wild trick of his ancestors. Shakespeare.
I entertain you with somewhat more worthy than the stale exploded trick of fulsom panegyrics. Dryden.
Some friends to vice pretend,
That I the tricks of youth too roughly blame. Dryden.
4. A juggle; an antic; any thing done to cheat jocosely, or to divert.
A rev'rend prelate stopp'd his coach and fix,
To laugh a little at our Andrew's tricks. Prior.
5. An unexpected effect.
So fellst foes who broke their sleep,

it would have been sufficient. Barnet.
If then the atheist can have no imagination of more senses than five, why doth he suppose that a body is capable of more than five? If we had double or triple as many, there might still be the same suspicion for a greater number without end. Bentley's Sermons.
To TRIPLE. v. a. [from the adjective.]
1. To treble; to make thrice as much, or as many.

TRI

To what purpose should words serve, when nature hath more to declare than groans and strong cries; more than streams of bloody sweat; more than his doubled and tripled prayers can express. Hooker, b. v.
If these halpence should gain admittance, in no long space of time his limited quantity would be tripled upon us. Swift.
2. To make threefold.
Time, action, place, are so preserv'd by thee,
That e'en Corneille might with envy see
Th' alliance of his triple unity. Dryden.
TRIPLET. n. s. [from triple.]
1. Three of a kind.
There fit C—nts, D—ks, and Harrison,
How they swagger from their garrison;
Such a triplet could you tell
Where to find on this side hell. Swift.
2. Three verses rhyming together: as,
Waller was smooth, but Dryden taught to join
The varying verse, the full resounding line,
The long majestic march and energy divine. Pope.
Some wretched lines from this neglected hand
May find my Hero on the foreign strand, Warm with new fires, and pleas'd with new command. Prior.
I frequently make use of triplet rhymes, because they bound the sense, making the last verse of the triplet a pin-darick. Dryden's En.
TRIPPLICATE. adj. [from triplex, Lat.] Made thrice as much.
TriPLICATE ratio, in geometry, is the ratio of cubes to each other; which ought to be distinguished from triple. Harris.
All the parts, in height, length, and breadth, bear a duplicate or triplicate proportion one to another. Gray.
TRIPPLICATION. n. s. [from triplicate.] The act of trebling or adding three together.
Since the margin of the visible horizon in the heavenly globe is parallel with that in the earthly, accounted but one hundred and twenty miles diameter; sense must needs measure the azimuths, or verticle circles, by triplication of the same diameter of one hundred and twenty. Glanville's Scyll.
TRIPLET. n. s. [triplet, Fr. from triplex, Lat.] Trebleness; state of being threefold.
Like many an angel's voice,
Singing before th' eternal majesty,
In their trinal triplicity on high. Fairy Qu. b. i.
It was a dangerous triplicity to a monarchy, to have the arms of a foreigner, the discontents of subjects, and the title of a pretender to meet. Bacon's Henry VII.
Affect not duplicities nor triplicities, nor any certain number of parts in your division of things. Wat's Legist.
TRIPMADAM. n. s. An herb.
TriPMADAM is used in salads. Morimer's Hyst.
TRIPPOD. n. s. [tripus, Latin.] A seat with three feet, such as that from which the priestess of Apollo delivered oracles.
Two tripods cast in antick mould,
With two great talents of the finest gold. Dryden's En.
TRIPOLY. n. s. [I suppose from the place whence it is brought.]
A sharp cutting sand.
In polishing glass with sand, putty, or tripoly, it is not to be imagined that those substances can by grating and fretting
the glass bring all its least particles to an accurate polish. Newton's Opticks.
TRIPPOS. n. s. A tripod. See TRIPPOD.
Welcome all that lead or follow,
To the oracle of Apollo;
Here he speaks out of his pottle,
Or the tripods, his tower bottle. Benj. Johnson.
Craz'd fool, who would't be thought an oracle,
Come down from off the tripods, and speak plain. Dryden.
TRIPPER. n. s. [from trip.] One who trips.
TRIPPING. adj. [from trip.] Quick; nimble.
The clear fun of the fresh wave largely drew,
As after thirst; which made their flowing shrink
From standing lake, to tripping ebb; that stole With soft foot towards the deep. Milton's Par. Lost.
TRIPPING. n. s. [from trip.] Light dance.
Back, shepherds, back, enough your play,
Here be without duck or nod,
Other trippings to be trod,
Of lighter toes. Milton.
TRIPTOPE. n. s. [tripteton, Lat.]
Triptote is a noun used but in three cases. Clark.

TRIPUDIOUSLY. adv. [from tripping.] With agility; with swift motion.
I his dirty after me
Sing, and dance it trippingly. Shakespeare.
Speak the speech trippingly on the tongue; but if you mouth it as many of our players do, I had as lieve the town-crier had spoke my lines. Shakespeare Hamlet.
TRIEME.

TRI

TAIREME. n. s. [triremis, Lat.] A galley with three benches of oars on a side.
TRISECTION. n. s. [tres and sectio, Lat.] Division into three equal parts: the trisection of an angle is one of the deicide-rata of geometry.
TRISTFUL. adj. [tristis, Lat.] Sad; melancholy; gloomy; sorrowful. A bad word.
Heav'n's face doth glow
With tristful visage; and, as gainst the doom,
I thought sick at the act. Shakespeare Hamlet.
TRISULC. n. s. [trifidus, Lat.] A thing of three points.
Consider the threefold effect of Jupiter's trifid, to burn, discuss, and terebrate. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

sisting of three syllables.
TRISYLLABLE. n. s. [trifidus, Latin.] A word consisting of three syllables.
TRITE. adj. [tritus, Latin.] Worn out; stale; common;
not new.
These duties cannot but appear of infinite concern when we reflect how uncertain our time is: this may be thought to trite and obvious a reflection, that none can want to be reminded of it. Rogers's Sermons.
She gives her tongue no moment's rest,
In phrases batter'd, stale, and trite,
Which modern ladies call polite. Swift.
TRITENESS. n. s. [from trite.] Staleness; commonness.
TRITHEISM. n. s. [tritheisme, Fr. tris and deos.] The opinion which holds three distinct gods.
TRITURABLE. adj. [triturable, Fr. from trituration.] Possible to be pounded or comminuted.
It is not only triturable and reducible to powder by contri-tion, but will not subsist in a violent fire. Brown.
TRITURATION. n. s. [trituration, Fr. tritura, Lat.] Reduction of any substances to powder upon a stone with a muller, as colours are ground: it is also called levigation.
He affirmeth, that a pumice stone powdered is lighter than one entire; that abatement can hardly be avoided in trituration. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. iv.
TRIVET. n. s. [See TREVET.] Any thing supported by three feet.
The best at horse-race he ordain'd a lady for his prize, Generally graceful; fair and young, and skill'd in house-wiferies.
Of all kind fitting; and withal a trivet, that enclos'd Twenty-two measures. Chapman's Iliad.
The trivet table of a foot was lame,
A blot which prudent Baucis overcame,
Who thrills beneath the limping leg a sherd. Dryden.
TRIVIAL. n. s. [trivialis, Fr. trivialis, Lat.]
1. Vile; worthless; vulgar; such as may be picked up in the highway.
Be subjects great, and worth a poet's voice,
For men of sense despite a trivial choice. Roscommon.
2. Light; trifling; unimportant; inconsiderable. This use is more frequent, though less just.
This argues confidence in your grace,
But the respects thereof are nice and trivial.
All circumstances well considered. Shakespeare Rich. III.
See you mad fools, who, for some trivial right,
For love, or for mistaken honour, fight. Dryden.
Were they only some slight and trivial indiscretions, to which the example of the world expos'd us, it might perhaps not much concern our religion. Rogers's Sermon.
In ev'ry work regard the writer's end;
And if the means be just, the conduct true,
Applause, in spite of trivial faults, is due. Pope.
The ancient poets are like many modern ladies: let an action be never so trivial in itself, they always make it appear of the utmost importance.
TRIVIALITY. adv. [from trivial.]
1. Commonly; vulgarly.
Money is not the finews of war, as is trivially said, where the finews of mens arms, in effeminate people, fail. Bacon.
2. Lightly; inconsiderably.
TRIVIALNESS. n. s. [from trivial.]
1. Commonness; vulgarly.
2. Lightness; unimportance.
TRIVUMPH. n. s. [triviumphus, Lat. triumphus, Fr.]
1. Pomp with which a victory is publicly celebrated.
Hence will I drag thee headlong by the heels
Unto a dunghill, which shall be thy grave;
And there cut off thy most ungracious head,
Which I will bear in triumph to the king. Shakespeare.
In ancient times the triumphs of the generals from victory, and the great donatives upon disbanding the armies, were things able to enflame all mens courage. Bacon.
2. State of being victorious.
Sublime with expectation when to see
In triumph issuing forth their glorious chief. Milton.
Hercules, from Spain,
Arriv'd in triumph, from Geryon slain. Dryden's En.

TRI

Eros has
Packt cards with Castor, and false play'd my glory Unto an enemy's triumph. Shakespeare Antony and Cleopatra.
Each order bright
Sung triumph, and him sung victorious king. Milton.
Turn arcs of triumph to a garden-gate. Pope.
If fools admire, or whining coxcombs toast,
The vain coquets the trifling triumphs boast. Logie.
4. Joy for success.
Great triumph and rejoicing was in heav'n. Milton.
5. A conquering card now called trump. See TRUMP.
To TRIUMPH. v. n. [triumpho, Lat. triumpho, Fr.] This word is always accented in prose on the first syllable, but in poetry sometimes on the last.
1. To celebrate a victory with pomp; to rejoice for victory.
The triumphing of the wicked is short, and the joy of the hypocrite is but for a moment. Job xx. 5.
Your victory, alas, begets my fears;
Can you not then triumph without my tears. Dryden.
2. To obtain victory.
This great commander fought many times to persuade So-lyman to forbear to use his forces any farther against the Christians, over whom he had sufficiently triumphed, and turn them upon the Persians. Knolles's Hyst. of the Turks.
Then all this earthy grossness quits,
Attir'd with stars, we shall for ever sit,
Triumphing over death, and chance, and time. Milton.
There fix thy faith and triumph o'er the world;
For who can help, or who can save besides?
While blooming youth and gay delight
Sit on thy rosy cheeks confess,
Thou hast, my dear, undoubted right
To triumph o'er this destin'd breath. Prior.
3. To insult upon an advantage gained.
How ill beseming is it in thy sex
To triumph, like an Amazonian trull. Shakespeare.
Sorrow on all the pack of you,
That triumph thus upon my misery. Shakespeare.
Our grand foe,
Who now triumphs, and in th' excess of joy
Sole reigning, holds the tyranny of heav'n. Milton.
TRIUMPHAL. adj. [triumphal, Fr. triumphalis, Lat. from triumph.] Used in celebrating victory.
He left only triumphal garments to the general. Bacon.
Ye so near heav'n's door,
Triumphal with triumphal act have met. Milton.
Steel could the works of mortal pride confound,
And hew triumphal arches to the ground. Pope.
Left we should for honour take
The drunken quarrel of a rake;
Or think it seated in a fear,
Or a proud triumphal car. Swift.
TRIUMPHAL. n. s. [triumphalia, Lat. triumphal ornaments.]
A token of victory. Not in use.
He to his crew that sat consulting brought Joyless triumphals of his hop'd success. Milton's Paradise Regain'd.

Captives bound to a triumphant car. Shakespeare.
It was drawn as a triumphal chariot, which at the same time both follows and triumphs. South's Sermons.
2. Rejoicing as for victory.
Think you, but that I know our state secure,
I would be so triumphant as I am! Shakespeare Rich. III.
Off with the traitor's head;
And now to London with triumphant march,
There to be crowned. Shakespeare Henry VI. p. iii.
Successful beyond hope, to lead ye forth Triumphant out of this infernal pit. Milton.
3. Victorious; graced with conquest.
He speedily through all the hierarchies
Intends to pass triumphant, and give laws. Milton.
Athena, war's triumphant maid,
The happy son will, as the father, aid. Pope's Odyssey.
TRIUMPHANTLY. adv. [from triumphant.]
1. In a triumphant manner in token of victory; joyfully as for victory.
Victory with little loss doth play
Upon the dancing banners of the French;
Who are at hand triumphantly display'd. Shakespeare.
Through armed ranks triumphantly she drives,
And with one glance commands ten thousand lives. Gran.
2. Victoriously; with success.
Thou must, as a foreign recreant, be led
With manacles along our street; or else
Triumphantly tread on thy country's ruin,
And bear the palm. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.
3. With insolent exultation.
A mighty governing lye goes round the world, and has almost banished truth out of it; and to reigning triumphantly in

Swills your warm blood like waf, and makes his trough
In your embow'd bosoms. Shakesp. Rich. III.
They had no ships but big troughs, which they call canoes.

- Where there is a good quick fall of rain water, lay a half trough of stone, of a good length, three foot deep, with one end upon the high ground, the other upon the low; cover the trough with brakes a good thickness, and cast sand upon the top of the brakes, the lower end of the trough will run like a spring of water. Bacon's Nat. Hist. No. 29.
Some logs, perhaps, upon the water swam,
An useless drift, which rudely cut within,
And hollow'd, first a floating trough became,
And cross some riv'let passage did begin. Dryden.
The water dissolves the particles of salt mixed in the stone, and is conveyed by long troughs and canals from the mines to Hall, where it is received in vast cisterns and boiled off. Add.

- TO TROUL. v. n. [trollen, to roll, Dutch.] See TROLL.

480	24	8
5760	288	96	12

- The Romans left their ounce in Britain, now our averdu-pois ounce, for our troy ounce we had elsewhere. Arbutnot.
TRUANT. n. f. [truand, Old Fr. treuant, Dutch, avagabond.]
An idler; one who wanders idly about, neglecting his duty or employment. To play the truant is, in schools, to stay from school without leave.

- For my part I may speak it to my shame,
I have a truant been to chivalry. Shakesp.
Though myself have been an idle truant,
Omitting the sweet benefit of time,
To cloath mine age with angel-like perfection,
Yet hath Sir Protheus made fair advantage of his days.
Providence would only initiate mankind into the knowledge of her treasures, leaving the rest to our industry, that we might not live like idle loiterers and truants. More.
Our ships are laden with the Trojan store,
And you like truants come too late ashore. Dryden's Fen.

- TRUANT. adj. Idle; wandering from business; lazy; loitering.
What keeps you from Wertemberg?
—A truant disposition, good my lord. Shakesp. Hamlet.
He made a blushing cital of himself,
And chid his truant youth with such a grace,
As if he matter'd there a double spirit,
Of teaching, and of learning instantly. Shakesp.
Where thou feedst a single sheep remain
In shades aloof, or couch'd upon the plain,
Or late to lag behind with truant pace,
Revenge the crime, and take the traitor's head. Dryden.

- TO TRUANT. v. n. [truander, to beg about a country, French;
truant, old German.] To idle at a distance from duty;

1. A temporary peace; a cessation of hostilities.
Leagues and truces made between superstitious persons, and such as serve God aright. Hooker, b. v.
They pray in vain to have sin pardoned, which seek not also to prevent sin by prayer; even every particular sin, by prayer against all sin, except men can name some transgression wherewith we ought to have truce. Hooker.
All this utter'd
With gentle breath, calm look, knees humbly bent,
Could not make truce with the unruly spleen
Of Tybalt, deaf to peace. Shakesp.
This token serveth for a flag of truce
Betwixt ourselves, and all our followers.
Men shall be lovers of their own selves, without natural affection, truce breakers. 2 Tim. iii. 3.
Least the truce with treason should be mixt,
'Tis my concern to have the tree betwixt.
Shadwel till death true dulness would maintain;
And in his father's right, and realm's defence,
Ne'er would have peace with wit, nor truce with sense. Dryd.

2. Cessation; intermission; short quiet.
There he may find
True to his reflex thoughts, and entertain
The irksome hours. Milton.
TRUCIDATION. n. f. [from truido, Lat.] The act of killing.

traffic by exchange; to give one commodity for another.
To truck. v. a. To give in exchange; to exchange.
The Indians truck gold for glances. L'Estrange.
Go, miser! go; for lucre sell thy soul,
Truck wares for wares, and trudge from pole to pole;
That men may say, when thou art dead and gone,
See, what a vast estate he left his son.
I see nothing left us, but to truck and barter our goods like the wild Indians, with each other. Swift.

- TRUCK. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. Exchange; traffick by exchange.
It is no less requisite to maintain a truck in moral offices, than in the common business of commerce. L'Estrange.
Love is covetous; I must have all of you: heart for heart is an equal truck. Dryden.
2. [τροχός] Wooden wheels for carriage of cannon. Ans.
TRUCKLEBED. n. f. [trucklebed, n. f. [properly trucklebed; from truckle, Latin, or τροχός.] A bed that runs on wheels under a higher bed.

- There's his chamber, his house, his castle, his standing bed and trucklebed. Shakesp. Merry Wives of Windsor.
If he that is in battle slain,
Be in the bed of honour lain;
He that is beaten may be said,
To lie in honour's trucklebed. Hudibras, p. i.

- TO TRUCKLE. v. n. [This word is, I believe, derived from trucklebed, which is always under another bed.] To be in a state of subjection or inferiority; to yield; to creep.
Shall our nation be in bondage thus Unto a land that truckles under us. Cleveland.
For which so many a legal cuckold
Has been run down in courts and truckle'd. Hudibras.
Men may be stiff and obstinate upon a wrong ground, and ply and truckle too upon a false foundation. L'Estrange.
Religion itself is forced to truckle to worldly policy. Norris.

- His zeal was not to lash our crimes,
But discontent against the times;
For had we made him timely offers,
To raise his post or fill his coffers:
Perhaps he might have truckle'd down,
Like other brethren of his gown.
They were subdued and insulted by Alexander's captains, and continued under several revolutions, a small trucking state, of no name till they fell under the Romans. Swift.

- TRUCULENCE. n. f. [traculentia, Lat.]

TRUCULENT. adj. [traculentus, Lat.]
1. Savage; barbarous.
A barbarous Scythia where the savage and traculent inhabitants transfer themselves from place to place in waggons, as they can find pasture, and live upon milk, and flesh roasted in the sun at the pomels of their faddles. Ray.

2. Terrible of aspect.
3. Destructive; cruel.
Pestilential feminaries, according to their grossness or subtlety, cause more or less traculent plagues, some of such malignity, that they enecat in two hours. Harvey on the Plague.
TO TRUDGE. v. n. [truggolare, Italian.] To travel laboriously;
to jog on; to march heavily on.
No man is secure, but night-walking heralds,
That trudge between the king and mistress Shore. Shakesp.

TRU

- No footer was he fit to trudge,
But both made ready to dislodge. Hudibras, p. iii.
Away they trudged together, and about midnight got to their journey's end. L'Estrange's Fables.
Go, miser! go; for lucre sell thy soul,
Truck wares for wares, and trudge from pole to pole;
That men may say, when thou art dead and gone,
See, what a vast estate he left his son! Dryden.

- Once a poor rogue, 'tis true, I trod the street,
And trudg'd to Rome upon my naked feet:
Gold is the greatest god. Dryden's Juvenal.
He that will know the truth, must leave the beaten track, which none but fervile minds trudge continually in. Locke.

- TRUE. adj. [εσπερα, εμπια, Saxon.]
1. Not false; not erroneous; agreeing with fact, or with the nature of things.
Of those he chose he falsest two,
And fittest for to forge true seeming lies. Fairy Qu. b. i.

Among unequals what society
Can sort? What harmony or true delight? Milton.
Religion, as it is the most valuable thing in the world, so it gives the truth value to them who promote the practice of it by their example and authority. Atterbury.

5. Faithful; not perfidious; steady.
My revenge is now at Milford, would I had wings to follow it! come and be true. Shakesp. Cymbeline.
So young and so untender?
—So young my lord, and true.
—Let it be so; thy truth then be thy dower. Shakesp.

- Do not see
My fair rose wither; yet look up; behold,
That you in pity may dissolve to dew,
And wash him fresh again with true love tears. Shakesp.
The first great work
Is, that yourself may to yourself be true. Recommon.
I'll rather die
Deserted, than oblige thee with a fact Pernicious to thy peace, chiefly assur'd Remarkably so late of thy true.
So faithful, love unequal'd. Milton's Par. Lost, b. ix.

- When this fire is kindled, both sides inflame it: all regard of merit is lost in persons employed, and these only chosen that are true to the party. Temple.
Smil'd Venus, to behold her own true knight Obtain the conquest, though he lost the fight. Dryden.
True to the king her principles are found;
Oh that her practice were but half so found!
Stedfast in various turns of state she stood,
And seal'd her vow'd affection with her blood. Dryden.
The truth hearts for Voiture heav'd with sighs;
Voiture was wept by all the brightest eyes. Pope.
True to his charge the bard preserv'd her long
In honour's limits, such the pow'r of song. Pope.

6. Honest; not fraudulent.
The thieves have bound the true man: now could thou and I rob the thieves and go merrily to London, it would be argument for a week. Shakesp. Henry IV.
If king Edward be as true and just,
As I am subtle, false, and treacherous,
This day should Clarence closely be mew'd up. Shakesp.

7. Exact; truly conformable to a rule.
If all those great painters, who have left us such fair platforms, had rigorously observed it, they had made things more regularly true, but withal very unpleasing. Dryden's Dufresnoy.
He drew
A circle regularly true. Prior.
Tickel's first book does not want its merit; but I was disappointed in my expectation of a translation nicely true to the original; whereas in those parts where the greatest exact-ness seems to be demanded, he has been the least careful. Arb.

8. Rightful.
They seize the sceptre;
Then lose it to a stranger, that the true
Anointed King Messiah might be born
Where'er I wander, boast of this I can,
Though banish'd, yet a trueborn Englishman. Shakesp.
Let him that is a truborn gentleman,
And stands upon the honour of his birth,
From off this briar pluck a white rose with me. Shakesp.

A trull who fits
By the town wall, and for her living knits. Dryden.
So Mævius, when he drain'd his skull,
To celebrate some suburb trull;
His families in order set,
And ev'ry crambo he cou'd get;
Before he could his poem close,
The lovely nymph had lost her nose. Swift.
2. It seems to have had first at least a neutral sense: a girl; a lass; a wench.
Among the rest of all the route
A passing proper lassie,
A white-hair'd trull, of twenty years,
Or neerer about there was:
In stature passing all the rest,
A gallant girl for hewe;
To be compar'd with townish nymphs,
So fair she was to view. Twainville.
TRULLY. adv. [from true.]
1. According to truth; not falsely; faithfully; honestly.
They thought they might do it, not only willingly, because they loved him; and truly, because such indeed was the mind of the people; but safely, because she who ruled the king was agreed thereto. Sidney, b. ii.
No untruth can avail the patron long; for things most truly are most behoovfully spoken. Hooker.
Widow alone is truly fair. Milton.
2. Really; without fallacy.
Right reason is nothing else but the mind of man judging of things truly, and as they are in themselves. South.
3. Exactly; justly.

TRUMP. n. f. [trump, Dutch, and old Fr. tromba, Italian.]
1. A trumpet; an instrument of warlike music.
Whilst any trump did found, or drum truck up,
His sword did ne'er leave striking in the field. Shakespeare.
Yet first to those ychain'd in sleep,
The wakeful trump of doom must thunder through the deep. Milton.
I heard
The neighing couriers and the soldiers cry,
And founding trumps that seem'd to tear the sky. Dryden.
Beneath this tomb an infant lies,
To earth whose body lent,
Hereafter shall more glorious rise,
But not more innocent.
When the archangel's trump shall blow,
And souls to bodies join,
What crowds shall with their lives below
Had been as short as thine. Wesley.
2. [Corrupted from triumph. Latimer in a Christmas sermon, exhibited a game at cards, and made the ace of hearts trump. Fox.] A winning card; a card that has particular privileges in a game.
Him Basso follow'd, but his fate more hard,
Gain'd but one trump and one plebeian card. Pope.

Now her heart with pleasure jumps,
She scarce remembers what is trump. Swift.
3. To put to or upon the TRUMPS. To put to the last expedient.
We are now put upon our last trump; the fox is earth'd, but I shall fend my two terriers in after him. Dryden.

For state to catch these thieves. Shakespeare's Tempest.
2. Falshood; empty talk.
Breaking into parts the story of the creation, and delivering it over in a mystical sense, wrapping it up mixed with other their own trumpery, they have sought to obscure the truth thereof. Raleigh's Hist. of the World.
3. Something of no value; trifles.
Embrio and idiots, eremits and friars,
White, black, and grey, with all their trumpery. Milton.
Another cavity of the head was stuffed with bilious, pricked dances, and other trumpery of the same nature. Addison.
TRUMPET. n. f. [trompette, French and Dutch.]
1. An instrument of martial music founded by the breath.
What's the business?
That such a hideous trump calls to parley
The sleepers of the house. Shakespeare.
If any man of quality will maintain upon Edmund earl of Gloster, that he is a manifold traitor, let him appear by the third found of the trumpet. Shakespeare's King Lear.
He blew
His trumpet, heard in Oreb since perhaps
When God descended, and perhaps once more
To found at gen'ral doom. Th' angelick blast Filled all the regions. Milton.
The last loud trumpet's wondrous sound
Shall through the rending tombs rebound,
And wake the nations under ground. Reformation.
Things of deep sense we may in prose unfold,
But they move more in lofty numbers told;
By the loud trumpet which our courage aids,
We learn that found, as well as sense, persuades. Waller.
The trumpet's loud clangor
Excites us to arms,
With shrill notes of anger,
And mortal alarms.
Every man is the maker of his own fortune, and must be in some measure the trumpet of his fame. Tatler.
No more the drum
Provokes to arms, or trumpet's clangor shrill Affrights the wives. Philips.
Let the loud trumpet found,
Till the roofs all around,

When so much true life is put into them, freely talk with them about what most delights them, that they may perceive that those under whose tuition they are, are not enemies to their satisfaction. Locke.

TULIP. n. f. [tulipa, Fr. tulipa, Lat.] A flower.

It hath a lily flower, composed of six leaves, shaped somewhat like a pitcher; the point of the middle of the flower is surrounded with stamina, and afterwards becomes an oblong fruit, which opens into three parts; and is divided into three cells, full of plain seeds, resting upon one another in a double row. To these may be added a coated root, with fibres on the lower part. The properties of a good tulip, according to the characteristics of the best florists of the present age, are, 1. It should have a tall stem. 2. The flower should consist of six leaves, three within, and three without, the former being larger than the latter. 3. Their bottom should be proportioned to their top; their upper part should be rounded off, and not terminate in a point. 4. The leaves when opened should neither turn inward nor bend outward, but rather stand erect; the flower should be of a middling size, neither over large nor too small. 5. The stripes should be small and regular, arising quite from the bottom of the flower. The chives should not be yellow, but of a brown colour. They are generally divided into three classes, viz. praeoces, or early flowers; media's, or middling flowers; and serotines, or late flowers. The early blowing tulips are not near so fair, nor rise half so high as the late ones, but are chiefly valued for appearing so early in the spring. Their roots should be taken up and spread upon mats in a shady place to dry; after which they should be cleared from their filth, and put up in a dry place until the season for planting. Miller.

The tulip opens with the rising, and shuts with the setting sun. Why tulips of one colour produce some of another, and running thro' all, still escape a blue. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

The eye of Eve to mark his play. Milton.

The rage of thirst and hunger now suppress'd,

The monarch turns him to his royal guest. Pope's Odyssey.

7. To form on a lathe by moving round. [turno, Lat.]

As the placing one foot of a pair of compasses on a plane, and moving about the other foot, describes a circle with the moving point; so any substance, pitched steady on two points, as on an axis, and moved about, also describes a circle concentric to the axis: and an edge-tool set steady to that part of the outside of the substance, will in a circumvolution of that substance, cut off all the parts that lie farther off the axis, and make the outside also Saw you never;

And by lead-men for the nonce,
That turn round like grindstones. Ben. Jonson.
The gate on golden hinges turning. Milton.
The cause of the imagination that things turn round, is,
for that the spirits themselves turn, being compressed by the vapour of the wine; for every liquid body, upon compression, turneth, as we see in water: and it is all one to the light, whether the visual spirits move, or the object moveth, or the medium moveth. And we see that long turning round breedeth the same imagination. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
2. To hew regard or anger, by directing the look towards any then the disdain and threatens, and again is humble. Dryd.

Socrates meeting Alcibiades going to his devotions, and observing his eyes fixed with great seriousness, tells him that he had reason to be thoughtful, since a man might bring down evils by his prayers, and the things which the gods send him at his request might turn to his destruction. Addison.
For this I suffer'd Phœbus' steeds to stray,
And the mad ruler to misguide the day,
When the wide earth to heaps of ashes turn'd,
And heav'n itself the wand'ring chariot burn'd. Pope.
Rather than let a good fire be wanting, enliven it with the butter that happens to turn to oil. Swift.
10. To become by a change.

Suspensions amongst thoughts, are like bats amongst birds, they ever fly by twilight. Certainly they are to be well guarded. Bacon.
A faint weak love of virtue, and of good,
Reflects from her on them, which understood
Her worth; and though she have shut in all day
The twilight of her memory doth stay. Donne.
He that saw hell in's melancholy dream,
And in the twilight of his phancy's theme Scar'd from his sins, repented in a fright,
Had he view'd Scotland, had turn'd profelyte. Cleveland.
Ambrosial night, with clouds exhal'd
From that high mount of God, whence light and shade
Spring both, the face of brightest heav'n had chang'd
To grateful twilight. Milton's Par. Lgh.
When the sun was down
They just arriv'd by twilight at a town. Dryden.
In the greatest part of our concernment he has afforded us

She hung about my neck, and kiss on kiss
She vied so fast, protesting oath on oath,
That in a twink the won me to her love. Shakespeare.
To TWINKLE. v. n. [twinkian, Saxon.]
1. To sparkle; to flash irregularly; to shine with intermitted light; to shine faintly; to quiver.
At first I did adore a twinkling star,
But now I worship a celestial fun.
As plays the fun upon the glassy streams,
Twinkling another counterfeited beam,
So seems this gorgeous beauty. Shakespeare.
Some their forked tails stretch forth on high,
And tear the twinkling stars from trembling sky. Fairfax.
God comprises all the goods we value in the creatures, as the sun doth the light that twinkles in the stars. Boyle.
The star of love,
That twinkles you to fair Almeyda's bed. Dryden.
Think you your new French profelytes are come
To starve abroad, because they starv'd at home,
Your benefices twinkl'd from afar. Dryden.
So weak your charms, that like a winter's night,
Twinkling with stars, they freeze me while they light. Dryden.
These stars do not twinkle when viewed through telescopes which have large apertures: for the rays of light which pass through divers parts of the aperture, tremble each of them apart; and by means of their various, and sometimes contrary tremors, fall at one and the same time upon different points in the bottom of the eye. Newton.
2. To open and shut the eye by turns.
The owl fell a mooping and twinkling. L'Estrange.

And if thou want'st a cord, the smallest thread
That ever spider twisted from her womb,
Will strangle thee. Shakespeare.
To reprove discontent, the ancients feigned, that in hell stood a man twisting a rope of hay; and still he twisted on, suffering an ass to eat up all that was finished. Taylor.
Would Clotho wash her hands in milk,
And twist our thread with gold and silk;
Would she in friendship, peace, and plenty,
Spin out our years to four times twenty,
And should we both in this condition,
Have conquer'd love, and worse ambition,
Else these two passions by the way,
May chance to shew us feurvy play. Prior.
The task were harder to secure my own
Against the pow'r of those already known;
For well you twist the secret chains that bind
With gentle force the captivated mind. Lyttleton.

That thou began'st to twist to fine a story? Shakespeare.
5. To unite by intertexture of parts.
All that know how prodigal
Of thy great soul thou art, longing to twist
Bays with that joy, which so early kist Thy youthful temples, with what horror we Think on the blind events of war. Waller.
6. To unite; to inuinate.
When avarice twists itself, not only with the practice of men, but the doctrines of the church; when ecclesiasticks dispute for money, the mischief seems fatal. Deay of Piety.
To TWIST. v. n. To be contorted; to be convolved.
In an ileus, commonly called the twisting of the guts, is a circumvolution or inflection of one part of the gut within the other. Arbutnot on Aliments.
Deep in her breast he plung'd the shining sword:
Th' Inachians view the slain with vast surprize,
Her twisting volumes, and her rolling eyes. Pope.
TWIST. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. Any thing made by convolution, or winding two bodies together.
Minerva nurs'd him
Within a twist of twining others laid. Addison.

T W I

2. A single string of a cord.
Winding a thin string about the work, hazards its breaking by the fretting of the several twists against one another. Maxon's Mech. Exer.
3. A cord; a string.
Through these labyrinths, not my grov'ling wit,
But thy silk twist, let down from heav'n to me,
Did both conduct and teach me, how by it
To climb to thee. Herbert.
About his chin the twist Dryden.
He ty'd, and soon the strang'd soul dismiss'd.
4. Contortion; writhing.
Not the least turn or twist in the fibres of any one animal, which does not render them more proper for that particular animal's way of life than any other cast or texture. Addison.
5. The manner of twisting.
Jack thrunk at first light of it; he found fault with the length, the thickness, and the twist. Arbutnot.
Twister. n. f. [from twist.] One who twists; a ropemaker.
To this word I have annexed some remarkable lines, which explain twist in all its senses.
When a twister a-twisting will twist him a twist,
For the twisting of his twist, he three times doth intwine;
But if one of the twines of the twist do untwine,
The twine that untwisteth untwisteth the twist.
Untwisting the twine that untwisteth between,
He twirls with his twister, the two in a twine;
Then twice having twisted the twines of the twine,
He twitcheth the twine he had twined in twain.
The twain that in twining before in the twine,
As twines were untwined, he now doth untwine,
'Twixt the twain intertwining a twine more between,
He, twirling his twister, makes a twist of the twine. Wallis.
To twist. v. a. [espizan, Saxon.] To finer; to flout; to reproach.
When approaching the stormy flowers,
We mought with our shoulders bear off the sharp showers,
And sooth to faine, nought seemeth like strife,
That shepherds to twisten each other's life. Spenser.
When I protest true loyalty to her,
She twists me with my falsehood to my friend. Shakespeare.
Ælop minds men of their errors without twisting them for what's amiss. L'Estrange.
This these scoffers twisted the Christians with. Tillotson.
Galen bled his patients, till by fainting they could bear no longer; for which he was twisted in his own time. Baker.
To twit. v. a. [epiccan, Saxon.] To vellicate; to pluck with a quick motion; to snatch; to pluck with a hasty motion.
He rose, and twit'd his mantle blue,
To-morrow to fresh woods, and pastures new. Milton.
Twit'd by the sleeve he mouths it more and more. Dryden's Juvenal.
With a furious leap
She sprung from bed, disturbed in her mind,
And fear'd at ev'ry step a twitching spright behind. Dryd.
Thrice they twit'd the diamond in her ear. Pope.
twitch. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. A quick pull; a sudden vellication.
But Hudibras give him a twitch,
As quick as lightning in the breech. Hudibras.
The lion gave one hearty twitch, and got his feet out of the trap, but left his claws behind. L'Estrange.
2. A painful contraction of the fibres.
Other confed'rate pairs
Contract the fibres, and the twitch produce,
Which gently puthes on the grateful food
To the wide stomach, by its hollow road. Blackmore.
Mighty physical their fear is,
For soon as noise of combat near is,
Their heart defending to their breeches,
Must give their stomachs cruel twitches. Prior.
A fit of the stone is the cure, from the inflammation and pain occasioning convulsive twitches. Sharp.
twitchgrass. n. f. A plant.
twitch-grass is a weed that keeps some land loose, hollow, and draws away the virtue of the ground. Mortimer.
To twit. v. n.
1. To make a sharp tremulous intermitted noise.
This must be done,
Swallows twitter on the chimney-tops. Dryden.
They twitter cheerful, till the vernal months Invite them back. Thomson.
2. To be suddenly moved with any inclination. A low word.
A widow which had a twittering toward a second husband, took a gossiping companion to manage the job. L'Estr.
twit. n. f. Any motion or disorder of passion; such as a violent fit of laughing, or fit of fretting.
The ancient errant knights
Won all their ladies hearts in fights,
And cut whole giants into fritters,
To put them into amorous twitters. Hudibras.

T Y M

- The moon was in a heavy twitter, that her cloaths never fitted her. L'Estrange.
twittletwattle. n. f. [A ludicrous reduplication of twattle.] Tattle; gabble. A vile word.
Insipid twittletwattles, frothy jests, and jingling witticisms,
inure us to a misunderstanding of things. L'Estrange.
twixt. A contraction of between.
Twilight, short arbiter twixt day and night. Milton.
Two. adj. [twa, Gothick; epi, Saxon.]
1. One and one.
Between two hawks, which flies the higher pitch;
Between two dogs, which hath the deeper mouth;
Between two blades, which bears the better temper;
Between two horses, which doth bear him best;
Between two girls, which hath the merriest eye,
I have some shallow spirit of judgment. Shakespeare.
Three words it will three times report, and then the two latter for some times. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
Fifteen chambers were to lodge us two and two together. Bacon.
They lay
By two and two across the common way. Dryden.
2. It is used in composition.
Next to the raven's age, the Pylian king
Was longest liv'd of any two-legg'd thing. Dryden.
A rational animal better described man's essence, than a two-legg'd animal, with broad nails, and without feathers. Locke's Works.
The two-shap'd Erichonius had his birth
Without a mother, from the reeking earth. Addison.
Her register was a two-leaved book of record, one page containing the names of her living, and the other of her deceased members. Ayliffe.
two-edged. adj. [two and edge.] Having an edge on either side.
Clarissa drew, with tempting grace,
A two-edg'd weapon from her shining case. Pope.
two-fold. adj. [two and fold.] Double.
Our prayer against sudden death importeth a two-fold desire, that death when it cometh may give us some convenient re-pite, or if that be denied us of God, yet we may have wildom to provide always before hand. Hooker.
Through mirk'om air her ready way she makes,
Her two-fold team, of which two black as pitch,
And two were brown, yet each to each unlike, Fairy Queen.
O thou! the earthly author of my blood,
Whose youthful spirit in me regenerate,
Doth now with two-fold vigour lift me up,
To reach at victory above my head,
Add proof unto mine armour with thy prayers,
And with thy blessings steel my lance's point. Shakespeare.
Our two-fold seas wash either side. Dryden.
Time and place taken for distinguishable portions of space and duration, have each of them a two-fold acceptation. Locke.
Ewes, that erst brought forth but single lambs,
Now dropp'd their two-fold burdens. Prior.
Holiness may be taken in a two-fold sense; for that external holiness, which belongs to persons or things, offered to God;
or for those internal graces which sanctify our natures. Atterbury.
two-fold. adv. Doubly.
A profelyte you make two-fold more the child of hell than yourself. Matt. xxiii. 15.
two-handed. adj. [two and hand.] Large; bulky; enormous of magnitude.
With huge two-handed sway,
Brandish'd aloft, the horrid edge came down, Wide wafting. Milton's Par. Lost.
If little, then she's life and soul all o'er;
An Amazon, the large two-handed whore. Dryden.
two-pence. n. f. A small coin, valued at twice a penny.
You all shew like gilt two-pences to me. Shakespeare.
To tye. v. a. To bind. See Tie.
tye. n. f. See Tie. A knot; a bond or obligation.
Lay your Command upon me; to the which my duties
Are with a most indissoluble tye Shakespeare.
For ever knit.
I have no tye upon you to be true,
But that which loosen'd your's, my love to you. Dryden.
Honour's a sacred tye, the law of kings,
The noble mind's distinguishing perfection,
That aids and strengthens virtue where it meets her,
And imitates her actions where she is not. Adams, Cato.
It ought not to be sported with;
Lend me aid, I now conjure thee, lend,
By the soft tye and sacred name of friend. Pope.
tyger. n. f. See Tiger.
TYMBAL. n. f. [tymbal, French.] A kind of kettle-drum.
Yet gracious charity! indulgent guest!
Were not thy pow'r exerted in my breast; Those

T Y P

- My speeches would send up unheeded pray'r:
The scorn of life would be but wild despair:
A tymbal's sound were better than my voice,
My faith were form, my eloquence were noise. Prior.
TYKE. n. f. [See Tike.] Tyke in Scottish still denotes a dog, or one as contemptible and vile as a dog, and from thence perhaps comes league.
Bale tyke, call'st thou me host? now,
By this hand, I swear I scorn the term. Shakespeare.
TYMPANITES. n. f. [τυμπανιτης, from τυμπανον, to sound like a drum.] That particular sort of dropsy that swells the belly up like a drum, and is often cured by tapping.
TYMPANUM. n. f. A drum; a part of the ear, so called from its resemblance to a drum.
The three little bones in meatu auditorio, by firming the tympanum, are a great help to the hearing. Weyman.
TYMPANY. n. f. [from τυμπανον, Lat.] A kind of obstructed flatulence that swells the body like a drum.
Hope, the christian grace, must be proportioned and at-temperate to the promise; if it exceed that temper and proportion, it becomes a tumour and tympany of hope. Hamm.
He does not shew us Rome great suddenly,
As if the empire were a tympany,
But gives it natural growth, tells how and why
The little body grew so large and high. Suckling.
Others that affect
A lofty stile, swell to a tympany. Roscommon.
Pride is no more than an unnatural tympany, that rises in a bubble, and spends itself in a blast. L'Estrange.
Nor let thy mountain-belly make pretence
Of likeness; thine's a tympany of sense.
A tun of man in thy large bulk is writ,
But sure thou't but a kilderkin of wit. Dryden.
The air is so rarified in this kind of dropsical tumour as makes it hard and tight like a drum, and from thence it is called a tympany. A. butnot.
TYNY. adj. Small.
He that has a little tiny wit,
Must make content with his fortunes fit. Shakespeare.
TYPE. n. f. [type, Fr. typus, Lat. τυπος.]

The faith they have in tennis, and tall stockings,
Short bolster'd breeches, and those types of travel,
And understanding again the honest men. Shakespeare.
Thy emblem, gracious queen, the British rose,
Type of sweet rule, and gentle majesty. Prior.
2. That by which something future is prefigured.
Informing them by types
And shadows of that destin'd feed to bruise
The serpent, by what means he shall achieve Mankind's deliverance. Milton.
The Apostle shews the Christian religion to be in truth and substance what the Jewish was only in type and shadow. Tillotson's Sermons.
3. A stamp; a mark not in use.
Thy father bears the type of King of Naples,
Yet not so wealthy as an English yeoman. Shakespeare.
What good is cover'd with the face of heav'n
To be discovered, that can do me good?
— I 'd advancement of your children, gentle lady,
— Up to some scaffold, there to lose their heads;
— No, to the dignity and height of fortune,
The high imperial type of this earth's glory. Shakespeare.
4. A printing letter.
TYPICK. n. f. [τυπις, Fr. typicus, Lat.] Emblematical;
TYPICAL. adj. figurative of something else.
The Levitical priesthood was only typical of the christian;
which is so much more holy and honourable than that, as the institution of Christ is more excellent than that of Moses. Atterbury.
Hence that many courfers ran,
Hand-in-hand, a goodly train,
To bleis the great Eliza's reign;
And in the typic glory shew
What fuller bliss Maria shall bestow. Prior.
TYPICALLY. adv. [from typical.] In a typical manner.
This excellent communicativeness of the divine nature is typically represented, and mysteriously exemplified by the Por-phyrian scale of being. Norris.

To tears and prayers, again she feels the smart
Of a fresh wound from the tyrannick dart. Denham.
And by the nobles, by his commons curst,
Th' oppressor rul'd tyrannick where he durst;
Stretch'd o'er the poor and church his iron rod,
And treats alike his vassals and his God. Pope.
TYRANNICALLY. adv. [from tyrannical.] In manner of a tyrant.
TYRANNICIDE. n. f. [tyrannus and caedo, Latin.] The act of killing a tyrant.
To tyrannise. v. n. [tyraniser, Fr. from tyrant.] To play the tyrant; to act with rigour and imperiousness.
While we trust in the mercy of God thro' Christ Jesus, fear will not be able to tyrannise over us. Hooker.
Then gan Carautius tyrannise anew,
And gainst the Romans bent their proper power,
And so Alecctus treacherously slew,
And took on him the robe of Emperor. Fairy Queen.
I made thee miserable,
What time I threw the people's suffrages
On him, that thus doth tyrannise o'er me. Shakespeare.
A crew, whom like ambition joins
With him, or under him to tyrannise. Milton.
Beauty had crown'd you, and you must have been
The whole world's mistress, other than a queen;
All had been rivals, and you might have spar'd,
Or kill'd and tyrannise'd without a guard. Waller.
He does violence to his own faculties, tyrannises over his own mind, and usurps the prerogative that belongs to truth alone, which is to command assent by its own authority. Locke's Works.
TYRANNOUS. adj. [from tyrant.] Tyrannical; despotick; arbitrary; severe; cruel; imperious. Not in use.
It is strange to see the unmanlike cruelty of mankind, who, not content with their tyrannous ambition, to have brought the others virtuous patience under them, think their matterd nothing without doing injury to them. Sidney.
Lately grown into a loathing and detestation of the unjust and tyrannous rule of Harold an usurper. Spenser.
Betwixt two charming words, comes in my father,
And, like the tyrannous breathing of the north,
Shakes all our buds from blowing. Shakespeare.

writings came abroad. Temple.
TYRANNY. n. f. [tyrannis, Latin; τυραννις, Fr.]
1. Absolute monarchy imperiously administered.
Our grand foe,
Who now triumphs, and in th' excess of joy,
Sole reigning holds the tyranny of heav'n. Milton.

TYR

- The cities fell often under tyrannies, which spring naturally out of popular governments, Temple.
 2. Unrefracted and cruel power.
 Boundless intemperance
 In nature is a tyranny; it hath been Th'untimely emptying of the happy throne,
 And fall of many kings. Shakespeare.
 3. Cruel government; rigorous command.
 Bleed, bleed, poor country!
 Great tyranny lay thou thy basis sure,
 For goodness dares not check thee. Shakespeare.
 Suspicions dispose kings to tyranny, and husbands to jealousy.
 God in judgment just,
 Subjects him from without to violent lords;
 Who oft as undeservedly intral
 His outward freedom; tyranny must be. Milton.
 4. Severity; rigour; inclemency.
 The tyranny o' the open night's too rough
 For nature to endure. Shakespeare's King Lear.
 TYRANT. n. f. [tyrannos]; tyrannus, Latin. Rowland contends that this word, with the correspondent Greek and Latin, is derived from tir, Welch and Erse, land, and rbanner, Welch, to share, q. d. tirbanner, a sharer, or divider of and among his vassals.]

TYR T

1. An absolute monarch governing imperiously.
 2. A cruel despotick and severe master; an oppressor.
 Love to a yielding heart is a king, but to a resisting is a tyrant. Sidney, b. i.
 I would not be the villain that thou think'st,
 For the whole space that's in the tyrant's grasp,
 And the rich east to boot. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
 Dissembling courtesy! how fine this tyrant
 Can tickle where she wounds! Shakespeare, Cymb.
 The house of woe, and dungeon of our tyrant. Milton.
 Consider those grand agents and lieutenants of the devil, by whom he scourges and plagues the world under him, to wit, tyrants; and was there ever any tyrant who was not also false and perfidious! South's Sermons.
 Thou mean'st to kill a tyrant, not a king.
 When tyrant custom had not shackl'd man,
 But free to follow nature was the mode. Dryden.
 TYRE. n. f. [Properly tire.] See TIRE.
 I have seen her beset and bedecked all over with emeralds and pearls, ranged in rows about the tyre of her head. Thomson.
 TYRO. n. f. [Properly tiro, as in the Latin.] One yet not master of his art; one in his rudiments.
 There stands a structure on a rising hill,
 Where tyre's take their freedom out to kill. Garth's Disp.

U.

VAC

- V. Has two powers, expressed in modern English by two characters, V consonant and U vowel, which ought to be considered as two letters; but as they were long confounded while the two uses were annexed to one form, the old custom still continues to be followed.
U, the vowel, has two sounds; one clear, expressed at other times by eu, as obtus; the other close, and approaching to the Italian u, or English oo, as obtus.
V, the consonant, has a sound nearly approaching to those of b and f. With b it is by the Spaniards and Gascons always confounded, and in the Runick alphabet is expressed by the same character with f, distinguished only by a diacritical point. Its sound in English is uniform. It is never mute.
 VACANCY. n. f. [from vacant.]
 1. Empty space; vacuity.
 How is't
 That thus you bend your eye on vacancy,
 And with th'incorporal air do hold discourse? Sh. Hamlet.
 2. Chasm; space unfill'd.
 The reader finds a wide vacancy, and knows not how to transport his thoughts to the next particular, for want of some connecting idea. Watts's Logic.
 3. [Vacancy, Fr.] State of a post or employment when it is un-supplied.
 In the vacancy of a bishop, the guardian of the spiritualities was summon'd to parliament in the bishop's room. Ayliffe.
 4. [Vacancies, Fr.] Time of leisure; relaxation; intermission; time unengaged.
 If, sometimes, each other's eyes we meet,
 Those little vacancies from toil are sweet. Dryd. St. of In.
 The daily intervals of time and vacancies from necessary labour, together with the one day in seven in the christian world, allow sufficient time. Watts.
 5. Littlefness; emptiness of thought.
 When alone, or in company, they sit still without doing any thing, I like it worse; for all dispositions to idleness or vacancy, even before they are habits, are dangerous. Walton.
 VACANT. adj. [vacant, Fr. vacans, Latin.]
 1. Empty; unfill'd; void.
 Why should the air so impetuously rush into the cavity of the receiver, if there were before no vacant room to receive it. Boyle's Works.
 A better race to bring into their vacant room. Milton.
 2. Free; unencumbered; uncrowded.
 Religion is the interest of all; but philosophy of those only that are at leisure, and vacant from the affairs of the world. More's Divine Dialogues.
 A very little part of our life is so vacant from uneasiness, as to leave us free to the attraction of remoter good. Locke.
 3. Not fill'd by an incumbent, or possessor.
 Left the fiend invade vacant possession. Milton.
 Others when they allowed the throne vacant, thought the succession should immediately go to the next heir. Swift.
 4. Being at leisure; disengaged.
 They which have the government, scatter the army abroad, and place them in villages to take their victuals of them, at such vacant times as they lie not in camp. Spenser.
 Sir John Berkley was the more vacant for that service, by the reduction of Barnstable. Clarendon.
 The memory relieves the mind in her vacant moments, and prevents any chains of thought, by ideas of what is past. Addison.
 5. Thoughtless; empty of thought; not busy.
 The wretched slave,
 Who, with a body fill'd, and vacant mind,
 Gets him to rest, cramm'd with distressful bread. Shakef.
 The duke had a pleasant and vacant face, proceeding from a singular assurance in his temper. Watson's Buck.
 Some vain amusement of a vacant soul.
 To VACATE. v. a. [vacare, Latin.]
 1. To annul; to make void; to make of no authority.

V.

VAG

- That after-act vacating the authority of the precedent, tells the world that some remorse touched even Strafford's most implacable enemies. K. Charles.
 2. To make vacant; to quit possession of.
 3. To defeat; to put an end to.
 He vacates my revenge;
 For while he trusts me, 'twere so base a part
 To fawn, and yet betray. Dryden.
 VACATION. n. f. [vacation, Fr. vacatio, Latin.]
 1. Intermision of juridical proceedings, or any other stated employments; recess of courts or senates.
 Vacation is all that time which passes between term and term, at London. Cowel.
 As these clerks want not their full task of labour during the open term, so there is for them whereupon to be occupied in the vacation only. Bacon Off. of Alienat.
 2. Leisure; freedom from trouble or perplexity.
 Benefit of peace, quiet, and vacation for piety, have rendered it necessary in every christian commonwealth, by laws to secure propriety. Hammond's Fundamentals.

 VACILLANCY. n. f. [vacillans, from vacillo, Lat. vacillant, Fr.] A state of wavering; fluctuation; inconstancy. Not much in use.
 I deny that all mutability implies imperfection, though some does, as that vacillancy in human souls, and such mutations as are found in corporeal matter. More's Divine Dialogues.
 VACILLATION. n. f. [vacillatio, from vacillo, Lat. vacillation, Fr.] The act or state of reeling or staggering.
 The muscles keep the body upright, and prevent its falling, by readily assenting against every vacillation. Darham.
 VACUITY. n. f. [from vacuum.] A philosopher that holds a vacuum: opposed to a plenist.
 Those spaces, which the vacuists would have to be empty, because they are manifestly devoid of air, the plenists do not prove replenished with subtle matter. Boyle.
 VACUATION. n. f. [vacuus, Latin.] The act of emptying. Diët.
 VACUITY. n. f. [vacuitas, from vacuus, Lat. vacuité, Fr.]
 1. Emptiness; State of being unfill'd.
 Hunger is such a state of vacuity, as to require a fresh supply of aliment. Arbutnot.
 2. Space unfill'd; space unoccupied.
 In filling up vacancies, turning out shadows and ceremonies, by explicit prescription of substantial duties, which those shadows did obscurely represent. Hammond's Fund.
 He, that seat soon failing, meets
 A vast vacuity. Milton.
 Body and space are quite different things, and a vacuity is interspersed among the particles of matter. Bentley.
 God, who alone can answer all our longings, and fill every vacuity of our soul, should intirely possess our heart. Rogers.
 3. Inanity; want of reality.
 The soul is seen, like other things, in the mirror of its effects: but if they'll run behind the glass to catch at it, their expectations will meet with vacuity and emptiness. Glanv.
 VACUOUS. adj. [vacuus, Lat. vacuë, Fr.] Empty; unfill'd.
 Boundless the deep, because I AM who fill Infinitude: nor vacuum the space. Milton's Par. Lost.
 VACUUM. n. f. [Latin.] Space unoccupied by matter.
 Our enquiries about vacuum, or space and atoms, will shew us some good practical lessons. Watts.
 To VADE. v. n. [vado, Latin.] To vanish; to pass away. Spenser.
 A word useful in poetry, but not received.
 Be ever gloried here thy sovereign name,
 That thou may'st smile on all which thou hast made;
 Whose frown alone can shake this earthly frame,
 And at whose touch the hills in smok shall vade. Watson.
 VAGABOND. adj. [vagabundus, low Latin. vagabond, Fr.]
 1. Wandering without any settled habitation; wanting a home.

V A I

Let them pronounce the steep Tarpeian death;
Vagabond exile: yet I wou'd not buy
 Their mercy at the price of one fair word. Shakes. Cor.
 A vagabond debtor may be cited in whatever place or jurisdiction he is found. Ayliffe's Paragon.
 2. Wandering; vagrant.
 This common body,
 Like to a vagabond flag upon the stream,
 Goes to, and back, lacquing the varying tide. Shakes.
 Their prayers by envious winds Blown vagabond or frustrate. Milton.
VAGABOND. n. f. [from the adj.]
 1. A vagrant; a wanderer, commonly, in a sense of reproach.
 We call those people wanderers and vagabonds, that have no dwelling-place. Raleigh's Hist. of the World.
 Reduced, like Hannibal, to seek relief
 From court to court, and wander up and down
 A vagabond in Africa. Addison's Cato.
 2. One that wanders illegally, without a settled habitation.
Vagabond is a person without a home. Watts.
VAGARY. n. f. [from vagus, Latin.] A wild freak; a capricious frolic.
 They chang'd their minds,
 Flew off, and into strange vagaries fell,
 As they wou'd dance. Milton's Par. Lost. b. vi. l. 613.
 Would your son engage in some frolic, or take a vagary, were it not better he should do it with, than without your knowledge? Locke on Education, § 97.
VAGINOPENNUS. n. f. [vagina and penna, Latin.] Sheath-winged; having the wings covered with hard scales.
VAGOUS. adj. [vagus, Lat. vagus, Fr.] Wandering; unsettled. Not in use.
 Such as were born and begot of a single woman, thro' a vagous lust, were called Sporii. Ayliffe.
VAGRANCY. n. f. [from vagrant.] A state of wandering; unsettled condition.
VAGRANT. adj. Wandering; unsettled; vagabond; unfixed in place.
 Do not oppose popular mistakes and surmises, or vagrant and fictitious stories. More's Divine Dialogues.
 Take good heed what men will think and say;
 That beauteous Emma vagrant courtes took,
 Her father's house, and civil life forsook. Prior.
 Her lips no living bard, I weat,
 May say how red, how round, how sweet;
 Old Homer only could indite
 Their vagrant grace, and soft delight:
 They stand recorded in his book,
 When Helen smil'd, and Hebe spoke. Prior.
VAGRANT. n. f. [vagant, Fr.] A sturdy beggar; wanderer; vagabond; man unsettled in habitation. In an ill sense.
Vagrants and outlaws shall offend thy view,
 Train'd to assault, and disciplin'd to kill. Prior.
 You'll not the progress of your atoms stay,
 Nor to collect the vagrants find a way. Blackmore.
 To relieve the helpless poor; to make sturdy vagrants relieve themselves; to hinder idle hands from being mischievous, are things of evident use. F. Atterbury.
 Ye vagrants of the sky,
 To right or left, unheeded, take your way. Pope.
VAGUE. adj. [vague, Fr. vagus, Latin.]
 1. Wandering; vagrant; vagabond.
 Gray encouraged his men to set upon the vague villains, good neither to live peaceably, nor to fight. Hayward.
 2. Unfixed; unsettled; undetermined; indefinite.
 The perception of being, or not being, belongs no more to these vague ideas, signified by the terms, whatsoever and things, than it does to any other ideas. Locke.
VAIL. n. f. [voile, French.] This word is now frequently written veil, from velum, Latin; and the verb veil, from the verb velo; but the old orthography commonly derived it, I believe rightly, from the French.
 1. A curtain; a cover thrown over any thing to be concealed.
 While they supposed to lie hid in their secret sins, they were scattered under a dark vail of forgetfulness. Wisdom.
 2. A part of female dress, by which the face and part of the shape is concealed.
 3. Money given to servants. It is commonly used in the plural.
 See VALE.
 To VAIL. v. a. To cover. See VEIL.
 To VAIL. v. a. [avaller le bonet, French.]
 1. To let fall; to suffer to descend.
 They fitly refused to vail their bonnets, which is reckoned intolerable contempt by seafarers.
 The virgin 'gan her beavoir vail,
 And thank'd him first, and thus began her tale. Fairfax.
 2. To let fall in token of respect.
 Certain of the Turks gallics, which would not vail their top-falls, the Venetians fiercely assailed. Knolles's Hist.
 They had not the ceremony of vailing the bonnet in salutations; for, in medals, they still have it on their heads. Add.

3. To fall; to let sink in fear, or for any other interest.
 That furious Scot,
 'Gan vail his stomach, and did grace the shame
 Of those that turn'd their backs. Shakespeare.
 To VAIL. v. n. To yield; to give place; to shew respect by yielding. In this sense, the modern writers have ignorantly written veil.
 Thy convenience must vail to thy neighbour's necessity; and thy very necessities must yield to thy neighbour's extremity. South.
VAIN. adj. [vain, Fr. vanus, Latin.]
 1. Fruitless; ineffectual.
 Let no man speak again
 To alter this; for counsel is but vain. Shakespeare.
Vain is the force of man,
 To crush the pillars which the pile sustain. Dryden.
 2. Empty; unreal; shadowy.
 Before the passage horrid Hydra stands,
 Gorgons, Cerion with his triple frame,
 And vain chimera, vomits empty flame. Dryden's En.
 Unmov'd his eyes, and wet his beard appears;
 And shedding vain, but seeming real tears. Dryden.
 3. Meanly proud; proud of petty things.
 No folly like vain glory; nor any thing more ridiculous than for a vain man to be still boasting of himself. L'Estran.
 He wav'd a torch aloft, and, madly vain,
 Sought godlike worship from a servile train. Dryden.
 The minstrels play'd on ev'ry tide,
Vain of their art, and for the mastery vy'd. Dryden.
 To be vain is rather a mark of humility than pride.
Vain men delight in telling what honours have been done them, what great company they have kept, and the like; by which they plainly confess, that these honours were more than their due, and such as their friends would not believe, if they had not been told: whereas a man truly proud, thinks the honours below his merit, and scorns to boast. Swift.
 Ah friend! to dazzle let the vain design;
 To raise the thought, and touch the heart, be thine. Pope.
 View this marble, and be vain no more. Pope.
 4. Shewy; ostentatious.
 Load some vain church with old theatrick state. Pope.
 5. Idle; worthless; unimportant.
 Both all things vain, and all who in vain things
 Built their fond hopes of glory, or lasting fame,
 Or happiness. Milton's Paradise Lost.
 He heard a grave philosopher maintain,
 That all the actions of our life were vain,
 Which with our sense of pleasure not conspir'd. Denham.
 To your vain answer will you have recourse,
 And tell 'tis ingenuit active force. Blackmore.
 6. False; not true.
 7. In VAIN. To no purpose; to no end; ineffectually; without effect.

 3. A wing with which the air is beaten.
 His sail-broad vans
 He spreads for flight, and in the furling smoke
 Up-lifted, spins the ground. Milton's Par. Lost.
 A fiery globe
 Of angels on full sail of wing drew nigh,

VAN

- Who on their plumed vans receiv'd him soft
 From his uneasy station, and upbore,
 As on a floating couch, through the blithe air. Milton.
 His disabled wing unfurled;
 He wheel'd in air, and stretch'd his vans in vain;
 His vans no longer could his flight sustain.
 The vans are broad on one side, and narrower on the other;
 both which minister to the progressive motion of the bird. Derb.
VANCOURIER. n. f. [avantcourier, French.] A harbinger; a precursor.
VANE. n. f. [vaene, Dutch.] A plate hung on a pin to turn with the wind.
 A man she wou'd spell backward;

 Thy pride,
 And wand'ring vanity, when least was safe,
 Rejected my forewarning. Milton.
 3. Trifling labour.
 To use long discourse against those things which are both against scripture and reason, might rightly be judged a vanity in the answerer, not much inferior to that of the inventor. Raleigh's Hist. of the World.
 4. Falshood; untruth.
 Here I may well shew the vanity of that which is reported in the story of Wallingham. Sir J. Davin.
 5. Empty pleasure; vain pursuit; idle shew; unsubstantial enjoyment; petty object of pride.
 Were it not strange if God should have made such store of glorious creatures on earth, and leave them all to be consumed in secular vanity, allowing none but the baser sort to be employed in his own service. Hooker.
 I must Bestow upon the eyes of this young couple
 Some vanity of mine art. Shakespeare's Temp.
 Cast not her serious wit on idle things;
 Makes her free will slave to vanity. Davies.
 Sin, with vanity, had fill'd the works of men. Milton.
 The eldest equal the youngest in the vanity of their dress; and no other reason can be given of it, but that they equal, if not surpass them, in the vanity of their desires. South.
 Think not when woman's transient breath is fled,
 That all her vanities at once are dead;
 Succeeding vanities the still regards,
 And though she plays no more, o'erlooks the cards. Pope.
 6. Ostentation; arrogance.
 The ground-work thereof is true, however they, through vanity, whilst they would not seem to be ignorant, do thereupon build many forged histories of their own antiquity. Spenser.
 Whether it were out of the same vanity, which possess'd all those learned philosophers and poets, that Plato also published, not under the right authors names, those things which he had read in the scriptures; or fearing the severity of the Areopagite, and the example of his master Socrates, I cannot judge. Raleigh's Hist. of the World.

VAP

7. Petty pride; pride exerted upon slight grounds; pride operating on small occasions.
 Can you add guilt to vanity, and take A pride to hear the conquests which you make. Dryden.
 'Tis an old maxim in the schools,
 That vanity's the food of fools;
 Yet now and then your men of wit
 Will condescend to take a bit. Swift's Miscel.
 To VAN. v. a. [from vannus, Lat. vanner, Fr.] To fan; to winnow. Not in use.
 The corn, which in vanning lieth lowest is the best. Bacon.
 To VANQUISH. v. a. [vaincre, French.]
 1. To conquer; to overcome; to subdue.
 Wert not a shame, that, whilst you live at jar,
 The fearful French, whom you late vanquish'd,
 Should make a start o'er seas, and vanquish you? Shakespeare.
 They subdued and vanquish'd the rebels in all encounters. Clarendon, b. viii.
 The gods the victor, Cato the vanquish'd chose:
 But you have done what Cato could not do,
 To chuse the vanquish'd, and restore him too. Dryden.
 2. To confute.
 This bold assertion has been fully vanquish'd in a late reply to the bishop of Meaux's treatise. F. Atterbury.
VANQUISHER. n. f. [from vanquish.] Conqueror; subduer.

If a man shou'd leap a garret, or vault down the monument, wou'd he leave the memory of a hero behind him?
Lucan vaulted upon Pegasus with all the heat and intrepidity of youth. Addison.
2. To play the tumbler, or posture-master.
VAULT. n. f. [from the verb.] A leap; a jump.
VAULTAGE. n. f. [from vault.] Arched cellar. Not in use.
He'll call you to fo hot an answer for it,
That caves and wombly vaultages of France
Shall chide your trespass, and return your mock
In second accent to his ordinance. Shakef. Hen. V.
VAULTED. adj. [from vault.] Arched; concave.
Restore the lock! she cries, and all around Restore the lock! the vaulted roofs rebound. Pope.
VAULTER. n. f. [from vault.] A leaper; a jumper; a tumbler.
VAULTY. adj. [from vault.] Arched; concave. A bad word.
I will kiss thy detestable bones,
And put my eye-balls in thy vaulty brows,
And ring these fingers with thy household worms. Shakef.
I'll say that is not the lark, whose notes do beat
The vaulty heav'ns so high above our heads. Shakef.
VAUNMURE. n. f. [avant mur, Fr.] A false wall; a work raised before the main wall.
With another engine named the warwolfe, he pierced with one stone, and cut, as even as a thread, two vaunmures.
This warlike captain, daily attempting the vaunmure, in the end by force obtained the same; and so possessed of the place, desperately kept it till greater help came running in, who, with wonderful expedition, clapt up a strong covering betwixt the wall and the vaunmure. Kneller's Hist. of the Turks.
To VAUNT. v. a. [vanter, Fr.] To boast; to display with ostentation.
Not that great champion
Whom famous poets verse so much doth vaunt;
And hath for twelve huge labours high extoll'd,
So many furies and sharp hits did haunt. Fairy Queen.

U D D

Not any damsel which her vaunteth most,
In skillful knitting of soft filken twine.
My vanquisher spoil'd of his vaunted spoil. Spenser.
To VAUNT. v. n.
1. To play the braggart; to talk with ostentation; to make vain show; to boast.
You say, you are a better soldier;
Let it appear so; make your vaunting true. Shakef.
The illusions of magick were put down, and their vaunting in wisdom reproved with disgrace. Wisdom xvii. 7.
So spake th' apostate angel, though in pain;
Vaunting aloud, but rack'd with deep despair. Milton.
Pride which prompts a man to vaunt and overvalue what he is, does incline him to disvalue what he has. Gov. of Tongue.
2. I scarcely know in what sense Dryden has used this word, unless it be miswritten for vaunt.
'Tis he: I feel him now in ev'ry part;
Like a new world he vaunts about my heart. Dryden.
VAUNT. n. f. [from the verb.] Brag; boast; vain ostentation.
Sir John Perrot bent his course not to that point, but rather quite contrary, in scorn, and in vain vaunt of his own counfels. Spenser.
Him I seduc'd with other promises and other vaunts. Milton.
Such vaunts who can with patience read,
Who thus describes his hero when he's dead?
In heat of action slain, he scorns to fall,
But still maintains the war, and fights at all. Granville.
VAUNT. n. f. [from vaunt, Fr.] The first part. Not used.
Our play
Leaps o'er the vaunt and firrings.
VAUNTER. n. f. [vauteur, Fr. from vaunt.] Boaster; braggart; man given to vain ostentation.
Some feign
To menage steeds, as did this vaunter; but in vain. Spenser.
Tongue-vallant hero, vaunter of thy might;
In threats the foremost, but the lag in fight. Dryden.
VAUNTEUL. adj. [from vaunt and full.] Boastful; ostentatious.
Whiles all the heavens on lower creatures smil'd,
Young Clation, with vauntful lufthied,
After his guile did cast abroad to fare. Spenser.
VAUNTINGLY. adv. [from vaunting.] Boastfully; ostentatiously.
Heard thee say, and vauntingly thou spak'st it,
That thou wert cause of noble Glo'tter's death. Shakef.
VA'WARD. n. f. [van and ward] Foie part Since we have the va'ward of the day,
My love shall hear the music of my hounds. Shakef.
Marcius,
Their hands i'th' va'ward are the Antiates
Of their best trust. Shakef. Coriolanus.
He desired nothing more than to have confirmed his authority in the minds of the vulgar, by the present and ready attendance of the va'ward. Kneller's Hist. of the Turks.
UBERTY. n. f. [ubertas, Latin.] Abundance; fruitfulness.
UBICATION. n. f. [from ubi, Latin.] Local relation; where-ness. A scholastick term.
Relations, ubications, duration, the vulgar philosophy admits to be something; and yet to enquire in what place they are, were gross. Glomville.
UBIQUITARY. adj. [from ubique, Latin.] Existing every where.
For wealth and an ubiquitous commerce, none can exceed her. Hen.
UBIQUITARY. n. f. [from ubique, Latin.] One that exists every where.
How far wide is Aquinas, which faith, by the same reason that an angel might be in two places, he might be in as many as you will? See now, either Xavier is every where, or else the carcass of a friar is more subtle than the nature of an angel. To conclude, either Aquinas is false, or the papists ubiquitous. Hall.
UBIQUITY. n. f. [from ubique, Latin.] Omnipresence; existence at the same time in all places.
In the one there is attributed to God death, whereof divine nature is not capable; in the other ubiquity unto man, which human nature admitteth not. Hooker.
Pern the light,
A solemn might,
As you should meet,
In any street,
In that ubiquity. B. Johnson.
Could they think that to be infinite and immense, the ubiquity of which they could thrust into a corner of their closet.
UBDER. n. f. [ubert, Saxon; uder, Dutch. uber, Lat.] The breast or dug of a cow, or other large animal.
A honnests, with udders all drawn dry,
Lay couching head on ground. Shakef.
Sithence the cow
Produc'd an ampler store of milk; the she-goat,
Not without pain, dragg'd her diffend udder. Prior.
UDDERED. adj. [from udder.] Furnished with udders.
Marian test could stroke the udder'd cow. Gay.

VEG

VEAL. n. f. [veal, a calf, veeler, vefter, to bring forth a calf, old French; vitellus, Latin.] The flesh of a calf killed for the table.
Would'st thou with mighty beef augment thy meal?
Seek Leadenhall; St. James's sends thee veal. Gay.
VECTION. n. f. [vectio, vefito, Latin.] The act of carrying, or being carried.
VECTIVATION. n. f. [vectivatio, Latin.] A species of vegetation seldom used amongst the antients. Arbutnot.
VECTURE. [veitura, Latin.] Carriage.
Three things one nation selleth unto another; the commodity as nature yieldeth it, the manufacture and the vecture or carriage. Bacon's Essays.
To VEER. v. n. [virer, French.] To turn about.
If a wild uncertainty prevail,
And turn your veering heart with ev'ry gale;
You lose the fruit of all your former care,
For the sad prospect of a just despair.
Nigh rivers mouth, where wind
Veers oft, as oft he fleers and shifts his fail. Milton.
I have no taste of the noisy praise
Of giddy crowds, as changeable as winds;
Servants to change, and blowing with the tide
Of swoll'n succels; but veering with its ebb.
A-head the master pilot fleers. Dryden.
And as he leads, the following navy veers.
It is a double misfortune to a nation given to change, when they have a sovereign that is prone to fall in with all the turns and veerings of the people. Addison's Freeholder.
The wind veered about to north-west. Derham.
To VEER. v. a.
1. To let out.
As it is a great point of art, when our matter requires it, to enlarge and veer out all fail; so to take it in and contract it, is of no less praise when the argument doth ask it. B. Johnson.
2. To turn; to change.
I see the haven nigh at hand,
To which I mean my weary course to bend;
Veer the main-sheet, and beat up with the land. Spenser.
Sailing farther, it veers its lilly to the west, and regardeth that quarter, wherein the land is nearer or greater. Brown.
VEGETABILITY. n. f. [from vegetabile.] Vegetable nature; the quality of growth without sensation.
The coagulating spirits of salts, and lapidifical juice of the sea, entering the parts of the plant, overcomes its vegetability, and converts it into a lapidous substance. Brown.
VEGETABLE. n. f. [vegetabilis, school Lat. vegetabile, Fr.] Any thing that has growth without sensation, as plants.
Vegetables are organized bodies consisting of various parts, containing vessels furnished with different juices; and taking in their nourishment from without, usually by means of a root, by which they are fixed to the earth, or to some other body, as in the generality of plants; sometimes by means of pores distributed over the whole surface, as in sub-marine plants. Hill's Materia Medica.
Let brutes and vegetables that cannot drink,
So far as drought and nature urges, think.
In vegetables it is the shape, and in bodies, not propagated by seed, it is the colour we most fix on. Locke.
Other animated substances are called vegetables, which have within themselves the principle of another sort of life and growth, and of various productions of leaves, flowers and fruit, such as we see in plants, herbs, trees. Wallis.
VEGETABLE. adj. [vegetabilis, Latin.]
1. Belonging to a plant.
The vegetable world, each plant and tree,
From the fair cedar on the craggy brow,
To creeping moss. Prior.
Both mechanisms are equally curious, from one uniform juice to extract all the variety of vegetable juices; or from such variety of food to make a fluid very near uniform to the blood of an animal. Arbutnot on Aliments.
The well shower'd earth
Is deep enrich'd with vegetable life. Thomson.
2. Having the nature of plants.
Amidst them stood the tree of life,
High eminent, blooming ambrosial fruit
Of vegetable gold. Milton's Par. Lost.
That vegetative terrestrial hath been ever the standing fund, out of which is derived the matter of all animal and vegetable bodies. Woodward's Nat. Hist.
To VEGETATE. v. n. [vegeto, Latin.] To grow as plants; to shoot out; to grow without sensation.
Rain-water may be endued with some vegetating or prolific virtue, derived from some saline or oleose particles. Ray.
As long as the seeds remained lodged in a natural soil, they would soon vegetate, and send forth a new set of trees. Woodward.
See dying vegetables life sustain;
See life dissolving vegetate again. Pope's Essay on Man.
VEGETATION. n. f. [from vegeto, Latin.]
1. The power of producing the growth of plants.
The exterior surface consisted of a terrestrial matter proper for the nourishment of plants, being little entangled with mere mineral matter, that was unfit for vegetation. Woodward.

The fun, deep-darting to the dark retreat
Of vegetation, sets the steaming power
At large. Thomson's Spring.
Love warbles through the vocal groves,
And vegetation paints the plain. Anonymous.
2. The power of growth without sensation.
Plants, though beneath the excellency of creatures endued with sense, yet exceed them in the faculty of vegetation and of fertility.
These pulsations I attribute to a plaffick nature, or vital principle, as the vegetation of plants must also be. Ray.
VEGETATIVE. adj. [vegetativus, Fr. from vegetare.]
1. Having the quality of growing without life.
Creatures vegetative and growing, have their seeds in themselves. Raleigh's Hist. of the World.
2. Having the power to produce growth in plants.
Homer makes deities of the vegetative faculties, and virtues of the field. Brown's Notes on Odyss.
VEGETATIVENESS. n. f. [from vegetative.] The quality of producing growth.
VEGETE. adj. [vigetus, Latin.] Vigorous; active; spritely.
The soul was vegete, quick and lively; full of the youthfulness and spriteliness of youth. South.
The faculties in age must be less vegete and nimble than in youth. Wallis.
VEGETIVE. adj. [from vegeto, Latin.] Vegetable; having the nature of plants.
Nor rent off, but cut off ripe bean with a knife,
For hindering stalks of his vegetive life. Tuff's Husbandry.
VEGETIVE. n. f. [from the adjective.] A vegetable.
Hence vegetives receive their fragrant birth,
And clothe the naked bosom of the earth. Sandys.
The tree still panted in th' unfinished part,
Not wholly vegetive; and heav'd her heart. Dryden.
VEHEMENCE. n. f. [vehementia, Latin.]
1. Violence; force.
Universal hubbub wild,
Of stunning sounds and voices all confus'd,
Assaults his ear with loudest vehemence. Milton.
2. Ardour; mental violence; terrour.
Think ye are men; deem it not impossible for you to err: sift impartially your own hearts, whether it be force of reason, or vehemency of affection, which hath bred, and still doth feed these opinions in you. Hooker's Pref.
The best persuasions
Fail not to use; and with what vehemency
Th' occasion shall instruct you. Shakef. Hen. VIII.
Would it apply well to the vehemency of your affection, that I should win what you would enjoy?
The extremity of the condition produced some earnestness and vehemency of expression more than ordinary. Clarendon.
This pure cause would kindle my rap'd spirits
To such a flame of sacred vehemence,
That dumb things wou'd be mov'd to sympathize. Milton.
He hurries on his action with variety of events, and ends it in less compals than two months. This vehemence of his is most suitable to my temper. Dryden.
Marcus is over-warm; his fond complaints
Have so much earnestness and passion in them,
I hear him with a secret kind of horror,
And tremble at his vehemence of temper. Addison's Cato.
VEHEMENT. adj. [vehement, Fr. vehemens, Latin.]
1. Violent; forcible.
A strong imagination hath more force upon light and subtle motions, than upon motions vehement or ponderous. Bacon.
Gold will endure a vehement fire for a long time, without any change. Grew.
2. Ardent; eager; fervent.
By their vehement instigation,
In this just suit come I to move your grace. Shakef.
I find
In all things else delight indeed; but such,
As us'd or not, works in the mind no change,
Nor vehement desire. Milton's Par. Lost.
VEHEMENTLY. adv. [from vehement.]
1. Forcibly.
The christian religion inculcates kindness more vehemently, and forbids malice and hatred more strictly than any religion did before. Tillotson.
VEHICLE. n. f. [vehiculum, Latin.]
1. That in which any thing is carried.
Evil spirits might very properly appear in vehicles of flame, to terrify and surprize. Addison's Guardian.
2. That part of a medicine which serves to make the principal ingredient potable.
That the meat descends by one passage; the drink, or moistening vehicle by another, is a popular tenent. Brown.
3. That by means of which any thing is conveyed.

VEI

The gaiety of a diverting word, serves as a vehicle to convey the force and meaning of a thing.
To VEIL, v. n. [velo, Lat. See VAIL.]
1. To cover with a veil, or any thing which conceals the face.

Her face was veiled; yet to my fancied sight,
Love, sweetness, goodness in her person shin'd.
It became the Jewish fashion when they went to pray, to veil their heads and faces.
2. To cover; to invest.

I decry,
From yonder blazing cloud that veils the hill,
One of the heav'nly host.
3. To hide; to conceal.

Of darkness visible so much be lent,
As half to shew, half veil the deep intent.
VEIL, n. f. [velum, Latin.]
1. A cover to conceal the face.

To feed his fiery lustful eye,
He snatch'd the veil that hung her face before.
The Paphian queen from that fierce battle borne,
With gored hand, and veil so rudely torn,
Like terror did among the immortals breed.

The famous painter cou'd allow no place
For private sorrow in a prince's face:
Yet, that his piece might not exceed belief,
He cast a veil upon supposed grief.

As veils transparent cover, but not hide,
Such metaphors appear when right apply'd.
When through the phrase we plainly see the sense,
Truth with such obvious meanings will dispense.

She accepts the hero, and the dame
Wraps in her veil, and frees from sense of shame.
2. A cover; a disguise.

I will pluck the borrow'd veil of modesty from the so seeming Mrs. Page; divulge Page himself for a secure and wilful Acton.

Knock on my heart; for thou hast skill to find
If it sound solid, or be fill'd with wind;
And thro' the veil of words thou view'st the naked mind.

The ill-natured man exposes those failings in human nature, which the other would cast a veil over.

VEIN, n. f. [veine, Fr. vena, Latin.]
The veins are only a continuation of the extreme capillary arteries reflected back again towards the heart, and uniting their channels as they approach it, till at last they all form three large veins; the cava descendens, which brings the blood back from all the parts above the heart; the cava ascendens, which brings the blood from all the parts below the heart; and the porta, which carries the blood to the liver. The coats of the veins are the same with those of the arteries, only the muscular coat is as thin in all the veins, as it is in the capillary arteries; the pressure of the blood against the sides of the veins being less than that against the sides of the arteries. In the veins there is no pulse, because the blood is thrown into them with a continued stream, and because it moves from a narrow channel to a wider. The capillary veins unite with one another, as the capillary arteries. In all the veins perpendicular to the horizon, excepting those of the uterus and of the porta, are small membranes or valves;
like so many half thimbles stuck to the side of the veins, with their mouths towards the heart. In the motion of the blood towards the heart, they are pressed close to the side of the veins; but if blood should fall back, it must fill the valves; and they being distended, stop up the channel, so that no blood can repass them.

When I did first impart my love to you,
I freely told you all the wealth I had Ran in my veins; I was a gentleman.

Horror chill
Ran through his veins, and all his joints relax'd.

2. Hollow; cavity.
Found where casual fire
Had wasted woods, on mountain, or in vale,
Down to the veins of earth.

Let the gla'ss of the prisons be free from veins, and their sides be accurately plane, and well polished, without those numberless waves or curls, which usually arise from land-holes.

3. Course of metal in the mine.
There is a vein for the silver.
Part hidden veins digg'd up, nor hath this earth
Entrails unlike, of mineral and stone.

It is in men as in soils, where sometimes there is a vein of gold which the owner knows not of.

4. Tendency or turn of the mind or genius.
We ought to attempt no more than what is in the compass of our genius, and according to our vein.

5. Favourable moment; time when any inclination is predominant.
Artizans have not only their growths and perfections, but likewise their veins and times.

VEL

6. Humour; temper.
I put your grace in mind
Of what you promis'd me.
I am not in the giving vein to-day.

Certainly he that hath a satirical vein, as he maketh others afraid of his wit, so he had need to be afraid of others.

They among themselves in pleasant vein
Stood scoffing.

7. Continued disposition.
The vein I have had of running into speculations of this kind, upon a greater scene of trade, have cost me this present service.

8. Current; continued production.
He can open a vein of true and noble thinking.

9. Strain; quality.
Now somewhat sings, whose endless fountain
Among the shepherds may aye remain;
Whether thee list, thy loved lass advance,
Or honour Pan with higher hymns of praise.

10. VEINED, adj. [veineux, Fr. from vein.]
1. Full of veins.
2. Streaked; variegated.

The root of an old white thorn will make very fine boxes and combs, and many of them are very finely veined.

Effulgent, hence the veiny marble shines.

VELLIT, n. f. [velleite, Fr. vellit, from velle, Latin.]
Vellit is the school-term used to signify the lowest degree of desire.

The wishing of a thing is not properly the willing of it;
but it is that which is called by the schools an imperfect velity, and imports no more than an idle, un-operative complacency in, and desire of the end, without any consideration of the means.

To VELLICATE, v. a. [vellio, Latin.] To twitch; to pluck; to act by stimulation.

Those smells are all frong, and do pull and vellicate the sense.

Convulsions arising from something vellivating a nerve in its extremity, are not very dangerous.

VELLICATION, n. f. [vellitatio, Lat.] Twitching; stimulation.
All purgers have a kind of twitching and vellication, besides the griping, which cometh of wind.

There must be a particular motion and vellication imparted upon the nerves, else the sensation of heat will not be produced.

VELLUM, n. f. [velum, Fr. veamen, Latin; rather vitulum, low Latin.] The skin of a calf dressed for the writer.

The skull was very thin, yielding to the least pressure of my finger, as a piece of vellum.

VELOCTY, n. f. [velocite, Fr. velocitas, Latin.] Speed; swif-tiness; quick motion.

Had the velocities of the several planets been greater or less than they are now, at the same distances from the sun; or had their distances from the sun, or the quantity of the sun's matter, and consequently his attractive power, been greater or less than they are now, with the same velocities; they would not have revolved in concentric circles, but moved in hyperbola's or parabola's, or in ellipses very eccentric.

VELVET, n. f. [veluto, Ital. vellus, Latin. velours, Fr.] Silk with a short fur or pile upon it.

Clad in white velvet all their troop they led,
With each an oaken chaplet on his head.

The different ranging the superficial parts of bodies, as of velvet, watered silk, we think probably is nothing but the different refraction of their insensible parts.

VELVET, adj.
1. Made of velvet.
This was moulded on a porringer,
A velvet dish.

2. Soft; delicate.
Through the velvet leaves the wind,
All unseen, 'gan passage find.

Poor deer, quoth he, thou mak'st a testament
As worldlings do, giving thy sum of more
To that which had too much. Then being alone Left and abandon'd of his velvet friends;
'Tis right, quoth he; thus misery doth part
The flux of company.

To VELVET, v. n. To paint velvet.
Verdure, ground with a weak gum arabic water, is the palest green that is, but good to velvet upon black in any drapery.

VELVET, n. f. [velours, Fr.] Velvet. An old word.
His horse with one girth six times pieced, and a woman's crupper of velvet, pieced with packthread.

VENAL, adj. [vena, Fr. venalis, Latin.]

VEN

1. Mercenary; prostitute.
This verb be thine, my friend, nor thou refuse
This, from no venal or ungrateful mule.

2. [from vein.] Contained in the veins. A technical word.
It is uncreasable to affirm, that the cool venal blood should be heated so high in the interval of two pulses.

VENALITY, n. f. [venalite, Fr. from venal.] Mercenariness;
prostitution.

VENATICK, adj. [venaticus, Latin.] Used in hunting.
VENATION, n. f. [venatio, Latin.] The act or practice of hunting.

The manner of their venation we shall find to be other-ways than by sawing away of trees.

TO VENDE, v. a. [vendre, Fr. vendo, Lat.] To sell; to offer to sale.

He had a great parcel of glasses packed up, which not having the occasion he expected to vend, and make use of, lay by him.

VENDER, n. f. [from vend.] One to whom any thing is sold.
If a vicar sows his glebe, or if he sells his corn, and the vendee cuts it, he must pay the tithes to the parson.

VENDER, n. f. [vendens, Fr. from vend.] A seller.
Where the consumption of commodity is, the venders seat themselves.

Those make the most noise who have the least to sell, which is very observable in the venders of card-matches.

VENDIBLE, adj. [vendibilis, Latin.] Saleable; marketable.
Silence only is commendable.

In a neat's tongue dried, and a maid not vendible.

This so profitable and vendible a merchandise, riseth not to a proportionable enhancement with other less beneficial commodities.

The ignorant mine-man, aiming only at the obtaining a quantity of such a metal as may be vendible under such a de-terminate name, has neither the design nor skill to make nice separations of the heterogeneous bodies.

VENDBENESS, n. f. [from vendible.] The state of being saleable.
VENDICATION, n. f. [venditio, from vendit, Latin.] Boastful display.

Some, by a cunning protestation against all readings, and vendication of their own nature, think to divert the lagacity of their readers from themselves, and cool the scent of their own fox-like thefts; when yet they are so rank as a man may find whole pages together usurped from one author.

VENDITION, n. f. [venditio, Fr. vendition, Latin.] Sale; the act of selling.

TO VENER, v. a. [among cabinet-makers.] To make a kind of marquetry or inlaid work, whereby several thin slices of fine woods of different sorts are fastened or glued on a ground of some common wood.

VENERICE, n. f. [veneficium, Latin.] The practice of poisoning.
VENERICIAL, adj. [from veneficium, Latin.] Acting by poison;
bewitching.

The magical virtues of mistletoe, and conceived efficacy into venefical intentions, seemeth a Pagan relique derived from the ancient Druids.

VENERFICIOUSLY, adv. [from veneficium, Latin.] By poison or wichecraft.

Left witches should draw or prick their names therein, and veneficiously mischief their persons, they broke the shell.

VENEMOUS, adj. [from venin, Fr.] Poisonous. Commonly, though not better, venomous.

The barbarians saw the venemous beast hang on his hand.

TO VENENATE, v. a. [veneno, Latin.] To poison; to infect with poison.

These miasms entering the body, are not so energetic, as to venenate the entire mass of blood in an instant.

By giving this in fevers after calcination, whereby the venenate parts are carried off.

VENENATION, n. f. [from venenate.] Poison; venom.
This venenation shoots from the eye; and this way a bati-stik may imposit.

VENESE, adj. [veneneus, Fr. from venenum, Latin.] Poisonous; venemous.

Dry air opens the surface of the earth to disincarcerate veneous bodies, or to attract or evacuate them hence.

Malphigi, in his treatise of galls, under which he comprehends all preternatural and morbose tumours of plants, demonstrates that all such tumours, where any insects are found, are raised up by some venenose liquor, which, together with their eggs, such insects shed upon the leaves.

VENERABLE, adj. [venerabilis, Fr. venerabilis, Latin.] To be regarded with awe; to be treated with reverence.

As by the ministry of saints, it pleased God there to shew some rare effect of his power; or in regard of death, which those saints have suffered for the testimony of Jesus Christ, did thereby make the places where they died venerable.

To make the passage easy, safe, and plain,
That leads us to this venerable wall.

VEN

Ye lamps of heav'n! he said, and lifted high
His hands, now free. Thou venerable sky!
Inviolable pow'rs, ador'd with dread,
Be all of you adur'd.

VENERABLY, adj. [from venerable.] In a manner that excites reverence.

The Palatine, proud Rome's imperial seat,
An awful pile! stands venerably great.
Thither the kingdoms and the nations come.

TO VENERATE, v. a. [venero, Fr. veneror, Latin.] To reverence; to treat with veneration; to regard with awe.

When baseness is exalted, do not hate
The place its honour for the person's sake:
The shrine is that which thou dost venerate,
And not the beast that bears it on its back.

The lords and ladies here approaching paid
Their homage, with a low obeisance made;
And seem'd to venerate the sacred shade.

A good clergyman must love and venerate the gospel that he teaches, and prefer it to all other learning.

VENERATION, n. f. [veneratio, Fr. veneratio, Lat.] Reverend regard; awful respect.

Theology is the comprehension of all other knowledge, directed to its true end, i. e. the honour and veneration of the creator, and the happiness of mankind.

We find a secret awe and veneration for one who moves above us in a regular and illustrious course of virtue.

VENERATOR, n. f. [from venerare.] Reverencer.
If the state of things, as they now appear, involve a re-pugnancy to an eternal existence, the arguments must be conclusive to those great priests and venerated of nature.

VENEREAL, adj. [venereus, Latin.]
1. Relating to love.

There are no venereal signs;
Vengeance is in my heart, death in my hand.
Then twol'n with pride, into the snare I fell,

Of fair fallacious looks, venereal trains,
Softened with pleasure and voluptuous life.
They are averse to venereal pleasure.

2. Confisting of copper, called venus by chemists.
Blue vitriol, how venereal and unpolished soever, rubbed upon the whetted blade of a knife, will not impart its latent colour.

VENEROUS, adj. [from venery.] Libidinous; lustful.
The male is less than the female, and very venereous.

VENERY, n. f. [venerie, from venere, Fr.]
1. The sport of hunting.

To the woods she goes to serve her turn,
And seek her spouse, that from her still does fly,
And follows other game and venery.

Describing beasts of venery and fishes, he hath sparingly inserted the vulgar conditions thereof.

The Norman demolished many churches and chapels in New Forest, to make it fitter for his pleasure and venery.

2. [From Venus.] The pleasures of the bed.
Contentment, without the pleasure of lawful venery, is continence; of unlawful, chastity.

VENERY, n. f. A bout; a turn.
I bruis'd my shin with playing at sword and dagger, three venerys for a dish of stewed prunes.

VENERECTION, n. f. [vena and ectio, Latin.] Blood-letting;
the act of opening a vein; phlebotomy.

If the inflammation be sudden, after evacuation by lenient purgatives, or a clyster and venection, have recourse to anodynes.

TO VENGE, v. a. [venge, French.] To avenge; to punish.
You are above,
You justices, that these our nether crimes,
So speedily can venge.

VENGABLE, adj. [from venge.] Revengeful; malicious.
A thrillant dart he threw,
Headed with ire, and vengable despite.

VENGANCE, n. f. [vengeance, French.]
1. Punishment; penal retribution; avengement.

The right conceit which they had, that to perjury vengeance is due, was not without good effect as touching their lives, who feared the wilful violation of oaths.

All the stor'd vengeances of heaven fall
On her ingrateful top!

The souls of all that I had murder'd
Came to my tent, and every one did threat
To-morrow's vengeance on the head of Richard.

Let me see thy vengeance on them.
Resolutions of future reforming do not always satisfy thy justice, nor prevent thy vengeance for former miscarriages.

Jove's and Latona's son his wrath express'd,
In vengeance of his violated priest.

The chorus interceded with heaven for the innocent, and implored its vengeance on the criminal.

VEN

2. It is used in familiar language. To do with a vengeance, is to do with vehemence; what a vengeance, emphatically what?
- Till the day appear, of reparation to the just,
And vengeance to the wicked. Milton.
When the same king adventured to murmur, the pope could threaten to teach him his duty with a vengeance. Raleigh.
Afnodous the fifty fume
Drove, though enamour'd, from the spouse
Of Tobit's son, and with a vengeance sent From Medea post to Egypt, there fast bound. Milton.
But what a vengeance makes thee fly
From me too, as thine enemy? Hudibras.
VENGEFUL. adj. [from vengeance and full.] Vindictive; revengeful; retributive.
Doubt not but God
Hath wifelier arm'd his vengeful ire. Milton.
Diffembling for her sake his riling cares,
And with wife silence pond'ring vengeful wars. Prior.
VENIABLE. adj. [from venia, Fr. from venia, Latin.]
VENIAL. adj. [from venia, Fr. from venia, Latin.]
1. Pardonable; susceptible of pardon; excusable.
If they do nothing 'tis a venial slip. Shakespeare.
More veniable is a dependence upon potable gold, whereof Paracelsus, who died himself at forty-seven, gloried that he could make other men immortal. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
What horror will invade the mind,
When the strict judge, who would be kind,
Shall have few venial faults to find? Rescuer.
While good men are in extirpating mortal sins, I should rally the world out of indecencies and venial transgressions. Addison.
2. Permitted; allowed.
No more of talk where God, or angel-guest,
With man, as with his friend, familiar us'd
To sit indulgent, and with him partake Rural repast; permitting him the while Venial discourse unblam'd. Milton's Par. Lost.
VENIALNESS. n. f. [from venial.] State of being excusable.
VENISON. n. f. [from venison, French.] Game; beast of chase;
the flesh of deer.
Shall we kill us venison?
And yet it irks me, the poor dappled fools Shou'd have their round haunches gor'd. Shakespeare.
We have a hot venison patty to dinner. Shakespeare.
In the records of Ireland, no mention is made of any park, though there be vert and venison within this land. Davies's Hist. of Ireland.
He for the feast prepar'd,
In equal portions with the venison shar'd. Dryden.
VENOM. n. f. [from venia, French.] Poison.
Your eyes, which hitherto hath borne in them
The fatal balls of murdering basilisks:
The venom of such looks we fairly hope
Have lost their quality. Shakespeare. Hen. V.
Beware of yonder dog;
Look, when he fawns, he bites; and, when he bites,
His venom tooth will rankle to the death. Shakespeare. Rich. III.
Like some tall tree, the monster of the wood,
O'erhanging all that under him would grow,
He sheds his venom on the plants below. Dryden.
TO VENOM. v. a. To infect with venom.
VENOMOUS. adj. [from venom.]
1. Poisonous.
Thy tears are saltier than a younger man's,
And venomous to thy eyes. Shakespeare. Coriolanus.
2. Malignant; mischievous.
A posterity not unlike their majority of mischievous progenitors; a venomous and destructive progeny. Brown.
This falsity was broached by Cocheus, a venomous writer;
one careless of truth or falsehood. Addison.
VENOMOUSLY. adv. [from venomous.] Poisonously; mischievously; malignantly.
His unkindness,
That strip'd her from his benediction, turn'd her
To foreign casualties. These things ring him
So venomously, that burning shame detains him
From his Cordelia. Shakespeare. K. Lear.
His praise of foes is venomously nice;
So touch'd, it turns a virtue to a vice. Dryden.
VENOMOUSNESS. n. f. [from venomous.] Poisonousness; malignity.
VEN'T. n. f. [from vente, French.]
1. A small aperture; a hole; a spiracle; passage at which any thing is let out.
On her breast
There is a vent of blood, and something blown;
The like is on her arm. Shakespeare. Ant. and Cleopatra.
They at once their reeds
Put forth, and to a narrow vent apply'd
With nicest touch. Milton's Par. Lost.
Have near the bung-hole a little vent-hole stopp'd with a stopple. Mortimer's Husbandry.

VEN

- Scarce any countries that are much annoyed with earthquakes, that have not one of these fiery vents, disgorging that fire, whereby it gains an exit. Woodward.
To draw any drink, be not at the trouble of opening a vent;
or if you take out the vent, stay not to put it in.
Full o'er their heads the swelling bag he rent,
And all the furies issued at the vent. Pope.
2. Passage out of secrecy to public notice.
It failed by late setting-out, and some contrariety of weather, whereby the particular design took vent beforehand. Wotton.
3. The act of opening.
The farmer's cadres mature,
Now call for vent; his lands exhaust, permit
T' indulge a-while. Philips.
4. Emission; passage.
The smother'd fondness burns within him;
When most it swells and labours for a vent,
The sense of honour, and desire of fame,
Drive the big passion back into his heart. Addison's Cato.
5. Discharge; means of discharge.
Had, like grief, been dew'd in tears,
Without the vent of words. Milton.
Land-floods are a great improvement of land, where a vent can be had. Mortimer's Husbandry.
6. [from vente, Fr. venditio, Lat.] Sale.
For the mart, it was alleged that the vent for English cloths would hereby be open in all times of war. Hayward.
By this war there is no vent for any commodity but of wool. Temple's Miscellany.
He drew off a thousand copies of a treatise, which not one in three score can understand, can hardly exceed the vent of that number. Pope's Letters.
TO VENT. v. a. [from venter, French, from the noun; ventare, Italian.]
1. To let out at a small aperture.
Hunger broke stone walls; that the gods sent not Corn for the rich men only: with these shreds
They vented their complainings. Shakespeare. Coriolanus.
When men are young, and have little else to do, they might vent the overflowings of their fancy that way. Denham.
Lab'ring still, with endless discontent,
The queen of heav'n did thus her fury vent. Dryden.
3. To utter; to report.
Had it been vented and imposed in some of the most learned ages, it might then, with some pretence of reason, have been said to be the invention of some crafty statesman. Stephens.
4. To emit; to pour out.
Revoke thy doom,
Or whilst I can vent clamour from my throat,
I'll tell thee thou dost evil. Shakespeare's K. Lear.
5. To publish.
Their sectators did greatly enrich their inventions, by venting the stolen treasures of divine letters, alter'd by profane additions, and disguised by poetical conversions. Raleigh.
6. To sell; to carry to sale.
This profitable merchandize not rising to a proportionable enhancement with other less beneficial commodities, they impute to the owners not venting and venturing the same. Carew.
Therefore did those nations vent such spice, sweet gums and pearls, as their own countries yielded.
TO VENT. v. n. To snuff. As he venteth into the air. Spenser.
VENTAIL. n. f. [from vantail, Fr.] That part of the helmet made to lift up.
VENTANNA. n. f. [Spanish.] A window.
What after pass'd
Was far from the ventanna, when I fate;
But you were near, and can the truth relate. Dryden.
VENTER. n. f. [Latin.]
1. Any cavity of the body, chiefly applied to the head, breast and abdomen, which are called by anatomists the three venters.
2. Womb; mother.
A has issue B a son, and C a daughter, by one venter; and D a son by another venter. If B purchases in fee, and dies without issue, it shall descend to the sister, and not to the brother of the half blood. Hale.
VENTIDUCT. n. f. [from ventus and ductus, Latin.] A passage for the wind.
Having been informed of divers ventiducts, I wish I had had the good fortune, when I was at Rome, to take notice of these organs. Boyle.
TO VENTILATE. v. a. [from ventilo, Latin.]
1. To fan with wind.
In close, low, and dirty alleys, the air is penn'd up, and obstructed from being ventilated by the winds. Harvey.
Miners, by perforations with large bellows, letting down tubes, and sinking new shafts, give free passage to the air, which ventilates and cools the mines. Woodward.
2. To winnow; to fan.
3. To examine; to discuss. Not

VEN

- Nor is the right of the party, nor the judicial process in right of that party so far peremptory; but that the same may be begun again, and ventilated de novo. Ayliffe.
VENTILATION. n. f. [from ventilatio, Lat. from ventilare.]
1. The act of fanning; the state of being fanned.
The foul, worn with too frequent culture, must lie fallow, fill it has recruited its exhausted salts, and again enriched itself by the ventilations of the air. Addison.
2. Vent; utterance. Not in use.
To his secretary Doctor Masfon, whom he let lie in a pal-let near him, for natural ventilation of his thoughts, he would break out into bitter eruptions. Wotton's Buckingham.
3. Refrigeration.
Procure the blood a free course, ventilation and transpira-tion by suitable and esphractic purges. Harvey.
VENTILATOR. n. f. [from ventilare.] An instrument contrived by Dr. Hale to supply close places with fresh air.
VENTRICLE. n. f. [from ventriculus, Fr. ventriculus, Latin.]
1. The stomach.
Whether I will or not, while I live, my heart beats, and my ventricle digests what is in it. Hale.
2. Any small cavity in an animal body, particularly those of the heart.
Know'st thou how blood, which to the heart doth flow,
Doth from one ventricle to the other go? Donne.
The heart being a muscular part, the sides are composed of two orders of fibres running spirally from base to top, contrarily one to the other; and so being drawn or contracted, confining the ventricles, and strongly force out the blood. Ray.
The mixture of blood and chyle, after its circulation through the lungs, being brought back into the left ventricle of the heart, is drove again by the heart into the aorta, through the whole arterial system. Arbutnot.
VENTRICOLOQUIST. n. f. [from venter and loquer, Lat.]
One who speaks in such a manner as that the sound seems to issue from his belly.
VENTURE. n. f. [from aventure, Fr.]
1. A hazard; an undertaking of chance and danger.
When he reads
Thy personal venture in the rebel's fight,
His wonders and his praises do contend
Which should be thine or his. Shakespeare. Macbeth.
For a man to doubt whether there be any hell, and thereupon to live so as if absolutely there were none; but when he dies to find himself confuted in the flames, this must be the height of woe and disappointment, and a bitter conviction of an irrational venture, and absurd choice. South.
I, in this venture, double gains pursue,
And laid out all my stock to purchase you. Dryden.
When infinite happiness is put in one scale, against infinite misery in the other, if the worst that comes to the pious man, if he mistakes, he the best that the wicked can attain to, if he be in the right, who can, without madness, run the venture? Lacke.
2. Chance; hap.
The king resolved with all speed to assail the rebels, and yet with that providence and surety, as should leave little to venture or fortune. Bacon.
3. The thing put to hazard; a stake.
My ventures are not in one bottom trusted,
Nor to one place. Shakespeare. Mer. of Venice.
On such a full sea we are now afloat:
And we must take the current when it serves,
Or lose our ventures. Shakespeare. Julius Caesar.
Thrice happy you, that look as from the shore,
And have no venture in the wreck to see. Daniel.
4. A VENTURE. At hazard; without much consideration; without any thing more than the hope of a lucky chance.
You have made but an estimate of those lands at a venture, so as it should be hard to build any certainty of charge upon it. Spenser.
A bargain at a venture made,
Between two partners in a trade. Hudibras.
A covetous and an envious man joined in a petition to Jupiter, who ordered Apollo to tell them that their desire should be granted at a venture.
Here was no scampering away at a venture, without fear or wit.
If Ahab be designed for death, though a soldier in the enemy's army draws a bow at a venture, yet the sure, unerring directions of providence shall carry it in a direct course to his heart. South.
TO VENTURE. v. n. [from the noun.]
1. To dare.
A man were better rife in his suit; for he that would have ventured at first to have lost the suitors, will not in the conclusion lose both the suitors and his own former favour. Bacon.
Origin mentioning their being cast out of Jerusalem, ventures to assure them that they would never be re-established, since they had committed that horrid crime against the favour of the world. Addison on the Christian Religion.

VER

2. To run a hazard.
Nor is indeed that man less mad than these,
Who freights a ship to venture on the seas,
With one frail interposing plank to save
From certain death, roll'd on by every wave. Dryden.
I am so overjoy'd, I can scarce believe I am at liberty; like a bird that has often beaten her wing in vain against her cage, dare hardly venture out, though she see it open. Dryden.
3. To VENTURE at. To engage in; or make attempts To VENTURE on or upon. } without any security of success, upon mere hope.
That slander is found a truth now; and held for certain,
The king will venture at it. Shakespeare.
It were a matter of great profit, save that it is too conjectural to venture upon, if one could discern what corn, herbs, or fruits are like to be in plenty and scarcity, by some signs in the beginning of the year. Bacon.
I never yet the tragic strain essay'd,
Deter'd by that inimitable maid:
And when I venture at the comic stile,
Thy scornful lady seems to mock my toil. Waller.
Though they had ideas enough to distinguish gold from a stone, yet they but timorously ventured on such terms as anxiety and anxieties. Lacke.
Turco-Papismus I would desire him to read, before he ventures at capping of characters. Aterbury.
TO VENTURE. v. a.
1. To expose to hazard.
In my school-days, when I had lost one shaft,
I shot his fellow of the self-same flight;
By vent'ring both, I oft found both. Shakespeare.
2. To put or send on a venture.
The fifth ventured for France, they pack in staunch hogheads, so as to keep them in their pickle. Carew.
VENTURER. n. f. [from venture.] He who ventures.
VENTUROUS. adj. [from venture.] Daring, bold, fearless;
ready to run hazards.
Charles was guided by mean men, who would make it their master-piece of favour to give venturous counsels, which no great or wise man would. Bacon.
He paus'd not, but with vent'rous arm
He pluck'd, he tasted. Milton's Par. Lost.
The vent'rous humour of our mariners costs this island
many brave lives every year. Temple.
Savage pirates seek through seas unknown,
The lives of others, vent'rous of their own. Pope.
VENTUROUSLY. adv. [from venturous.] Daringly; fearlessly; boldly.
Siege was laid to the fort by the Lord Gray, then deputy, with a smaller number than those were within the fort; venturosly indeed; but haste was made to attack them before the rebels came in to them. Bacon.
VENTUROUSNESS. n. f. [from venturous.] Boldness; willingness to hazard.
Her coming into a place where the walls and ceilings were whited over, much offended her fight, and made her repent her vent'rousness. Boyle on Colours.

VERACITY. n. f. [from verax, Latin.]
1. Moral truth; honesty of report.
2. Physical truth; consistency of report with fact. Less proper.
When they submitted to the most ignominious and cruel deaths, rather than retract their testimony, there was no reason to doubt the veracity of those facts which they related. Addison.
VERACIOUS. adj. [from verax, Latin.] Observant of truth.
VERB. n. f. [from verbe, Fr. verbum, Lat.] A part of speech signifying existence, or some modification thereof, as action, passion. And withal some disposition or intention of the mind relating thereto, as of affirming, denying, interrogating, commanding.
Men usually talk of a noun and a verb. Shakespeare.
VERBAL. adj. [from verbalis, Fr. verbalis, Latin.]
1. Spoken, not written.
2. Oral; uttered by mouth.
Made she no verbal quest? Shakespeare.
Yes, once or twice she heav'd the name of father
Pantingly forth, as if it prest her heart. Shakespeare.
3. Consisting in mere words.
If young African for fame, a venturous
His wasted country freed from Punick rage,
The deed becomes unprais'd, the man at least; no more
And loses, though but verbal, his reward. Milton.
Being at first out of the way to science, in the progress of their inquiries they must lose themselves, and the truth, in a verbal labyrinth.
It was such a denial or confession of him as would appear in preaching: but this is managed in words and verbal pro-fection. South.

VER

4. Verbose; full of words. Out of use. I am sorry. You put me to forget a lady's manners, By being so verbal. Shakespeare.
5. Minutely exact in words.
6. Literal; having word answering to word. Neglect the rules each verbal critic lays, For not to know some trifles is a praise. Pope. Whoever offers at verbal translation, shall have the misfortune of that young traveller, who lost his own language abroad, and brought home no other instead of it. Denham. The verbal copier is incumber'd with so many difficulties at once, that he can never disentangle himself from all. Dryden.
7. [verbal, Fr. in grammar.] A verbal noun is a noun derived from a verb.
- VERBALITY. n. f. [from verbal.] Mere bare words. Sometimes he will seem to be charmed with words of holy scripture, and to fly from the letter and dead verbality, who must only start at the life and animated materials thereof. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
1. In words; orally. The manner of our denying the deity of Christ here prohibited, was by words and oral expressions verbally to deny it. South's Sermons.
2. Word for word. 'Tis almost impossible to translate verbally, and well, at the same time. Dryden.
- VERBATIM. adv. [Latin.] Word for word. Think not, although in writing I prefer'd The manner of thy vile outrageous crimes, That therefore I have forg'd, or am not able Verbatim to rehearse the method of my pen. Shakespeare. See the transcripts of both charters verbatim in Mat. Paris. Hale.

- VERECUND. adj. [verecund, old French; verecundus, Latin.] Modest; bashful.
- VERGE. n. f. [verge, Fr. virga, Latin.]
1. A rod, or something in form of a rod, carried as an emblem of authority. The mace of a dean. Suppose him now a dean compleat, Devoutly lolling in his seat; The silver verge, with decent pride, Stuck underneath his cushion side. Swift.
2. [verge, Latin.] The brink; the edge; the utmost border. Would the inclusive verge Of golden metal, that must round my brow, Were red-hot steel to fear me to the brain. Shakespeare. I lay, and will in battle prove, Or here, or elsewhere, to the furthest verge, That ever was survey'd by English eye. Shakespeare. You are old. Nature in you stands on the very verge Of her confine. Shakespeare's Lear. Serve they as a flowry verge to bind The fluid skirts of that same watry cloud, Left it again dissolve and show'r the earth. Milton. Let fortune empty her whole quiver on me, I have a soul, that, like an ample shield, Can take in all, and verge enough for more. Dryden. Every thing great, within the verge of nature, or out of it, has a proper part assigned it in this poem. Addison. Then let him chuse a damsel young and fair, To bless his age, and bring a worthy heir, To sooth his care, and free from noise and strife, Conduct him gently to the verge of life. Pope.
3. In law. Verge is the compass about the king's court, bounding the jurisdiction of the lord steward of the king's household, and of the coroner of the king's house, and which seems to have been 12 miles round. Verge hath also another signification, and is used for a stick, or rod, whereby one is admitted tenant, and, holding it in his hand, sweareth fealty to the lord of a manor; who, for that reason, is called tenant by the verge. Cowel.
- Fear not; whom we raise, We will make fast within a hallo'd verge. Shakespeare.
- TO VERGE. v. n. [vergo, Lat.] To tend; to bend downwards. They serve indifferently for vowels in respect of the aperture, and for consonants in respect of the pene-aperture; and so much the more verging either way, according to the respective occasions. Holder.

- Such are indicated, when the juices of a human body verge to putrefaction. Arbutnot.
- Man, Perhaps acts second to some sphere unknown; Touches some wheel, or verges to some goal; 'Tis but a part we see, and not the whole. Pope.
- VERGER. n. f. [from verge.] He that carries the mace before the dean. I can tip the verges with half a crown, and get into the best seat. Farquhar.
- VERIDICAL. adj. [veridicus, Latin.] Telling truth. Dick.
- VERIFICATION. n. f. [from verity.] Confirmation by argument or evidence. In verification of this we will mention a phenomenon of our engine. Boyle.
- TO VERIFY. v. n. [verifier, Fr.] To justify against charge of falsehood; to confirm; to prove true. What seemeth to have been uttered concerning sermons, and their efficacy or necessity, in regard of divine matter, must consequently be verified in sundry other kinds of teaching, if the matter be the same in all. Hooker. This is verified by a number of examples, that whatsoever is gained by an abusive treaty, ought to be restored. Bacon. So shalt thou best fulfill, best verify The prophets old, who sung thy endless reign. Milton. So spake this oracle, then verify'd, When Jesus, son of Mary, second Eve, Saw Satan fall. Milton's Par. Lost.
- Though you may mistake a year, Though your prognosticks run too fast, To verify'd at last. Swift. Spain shall have three kings; which is now wonderfully verified; for besides the king of Portugal, there are now two rivals for Spain. Swift's Merlin's Prophecy.
- VERILY. adv. [from very.] In truth; certainly. Verily 'tis better to be lowly born, Than to be perk'd up in a glist'ring grief. Shakespeare.

VER

2. With great confidence. It was verily thought, that had it not been for four great disavours of that voyage, the enterprise had succeeded. Bacon.
- By repeating the sacramental test, we are verily persuaded the consequence will be an entire alteration of religion among us. Swift on the Sacramental Test.
- VERISIMILAR. adj. [verisimilis, Latin.] Probable; likely.
- VERISIMILITUDE. n. f. [verisimilitudo, Latin.] Probability; likelihood; resemblance of truth. Touching the verisimilitude or probable truth of this relation, several reasons seem to overthrow it. Brown. A noble nation, upon whom if not such verities, at least such verisimilitudes of fortitude were placed. Brown's Vul. Er. Verisimilitude and opinion are an easy purchase; but true knowledge is dear and difficult. I like a point, it requires an acuteness to its discovery: while verisimilitude, like the expanded superficies, is obvious, sensible, and affords a large and easy held for loose enquiry. Glanville.
- The plot, the wit, the characters, the passions, are exalted as high as the imagination of the poet can carry them, with proportion to verisimilitude. Dryden's Essay on Dramatick Poetry. Though Horace gives permission to painters and poets to dare every thing, yet he encourages neither to make things out of nature and verisimilitude. Dryden.
- VERITABLE. adj. [veritable, Fr.] True; agreeable to fact. Indeed! 'tis true? — Most veritable; therefore look to't well. Shakespeare. The preface of the year succeeding made from insects in oak-apples, is I doubt too indistinct, nor veritable from event. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
- VERITY. n. f. [veritas, Fr. veritas, Latin.]
1. Truth; consonance to the reality of things. If any refuse to believe us disputing for the verity of religion established, let them believe God himself thus miraculously working for it. Hooker. I saw their weapons drawn; there was a noise; That's verity. Shakespeare's Tempest. The precipitancy of disputation, and the fur and noise of passions that usually attend it, must needs be prejudicial to verity; its calm intimations can no more be heard in such a bustle, than a whistle among a croud of sailors in a storm. Glanville.
- It is a proposition of eternal verity, that none can govern while he is despised. We may as well imagine that there may be a king without majesty, a supreme without sovereignty. South.
2. A true assertion; a true tenet. And that age, which my grey hairs make seem more than it is, hath not diminished in me the power to protect an undeniable verity. Sidney. Wherefore should any man think, but that reading itself is one of the ordinary means, whereby it pleases God, of his gracious goodnels, to infill that celestial verity, which being but so received, is nevertheless effectual to save souls. Hooker.
- If there come truth from them, Why by the verities on these made good, May they not be my oracles as well? Shakespeare. Must virtue be preferred by a lie? Virtue and truth do ever best agree; By this it seems to be a verity, Since the effects to good and virtuous be. Davies.
3. Moral truth; agreement of the words with the thoughts. VERJUICE. n. f. [verjus, French.] Acid liquor expressed from crab-apples. It is vulgarly pronounced varges. Hang a dog upon a crab-tree, and he'll never love verjuice. L'Estrange.
- The barley-pudding comes in place: Then bids fall on; himself, for saving charges, A peck'd sic'd onion cats, and tipples verjuice. Dryden. The native verjuice of the crab, deriv'd Through th' infix'd grass, a grateful mixture forms Of tart and sweet. Philips.
- VERMICELLI. n. f. [Italian.] A paste rolled and broken in the form of worms. With oysters, eggs, and vermicelli, She let him almost burst his belly. Prior.
- VERMICULAR. adj. [vermiculus, Latin.] Acting like a worm; continued from one part to another of the same body. By the vermicular motion of the intestines, the grosser parts are derived downwards, while the finer are squeezed into the narrow orifices of the lacteal vessels. Cheyne.
- TO VERMICULATE. v. a. [vermicule, Fr. vermiculatus, Lat.] To inlay; to work in chequer work; or pieces of divers colours. Bailey.
- VERMICULATION. n. f. [from vermiculate.] Continuation of motion from one part to another. My heart moves naturally by the motion of palpitation; my guts by the motion of vermiculation. Hale.
- VERMICULE. n. f. [vermiculus, vermis, Latin.] A little grub, worm.

VER

- I saw the shining oak-ball ichneumon strike its erebra into an oak-apple, to lay its eggs therein; and hence are many vermicules seen towards the outside of these apples. Derham.
- VERMICULOUS. adj. [vermiculosus, Lat.] Full of grubs.
- VERMIFORM. adj. [vermiforme, Fr. vermis and forma, Lat.] Having the shape of a worm.
- VERMIFUGE. n. f. [from vermis and fuge, Lat.] Any medicine that destroys or expels worms.
- VERMIL. n. f. [vermil, vermillon, Fr.]
- VERMILION. n. f. 1. The cochineal; a grub of a particular plant. 2. Facitious or native cinnabar; sulphur mixed with mercury. This is the usual, though not primitive signification. The imperfect metals are subject to rust, except mercury, which is made into vermilion by solution or calcination. Bacon. The fairest and most principal red is vermilion, called in Latin minium. It is a poison, and found where great store of quicksilver is. Peacham.
3. Any beautiful red colour. How the red roses flush up in her cheeks, And the pure snow with goodly vermil stain, Like crimson dy'd in grain. Spenser. There grew a goodly tree him fair beside, Laden with fruit and apples rose red, As they in pure vermilion had been dy'd, Whereof great virtues over all were read. Fairy Queen. Simple colours are strong and sensible, though they are clear as vermilion. Dryden's Duke's Son.
- TO VERMILION. v. a. [from the noun.] To die red. A sprightly red vermilions all her face, And her eyes languish with unusual grace. Glanville.
- VERMINE. n. f. [vermine, Fr. vermis, Latin.] Any noxious animal. Used commonly for small creatures. What is your study? — How to prevent the fiend, and to kill vermin. Shakespeare. The head of a wolf, dried and hanged up in a dove-house, will scare away vermin, such as weazels and polecats. Bacon. An idle person only lives to spend his time, and eat the fruits of the earth, like a vermin or a wolf. Taylor. The stars determine You are my prisoners, bale vermin. Hudibras. A weazle taken in a trap, was charg'd with misdemeanors, and the poor vermin stood much upon her innocence. L'Estr. Great injuries these vermin, mice and rats, do in the field. Mortimer's Husbandry.
- He that has so little wit To nourish vermin, may be bit. Swift.
- TO VERMINATE. v. n. [from vermin.] To breed vermine.
- VERMINATION. n. f. [from verminate.] Generation of vermine. Redi discarding anomalous generation, tried experiments relating to the vermination of serpents and flesh. Derham.
- VERMINOUS. adj. [from vermine.] Tending to vermine; disposed to breed vermine. A wasting of childrens flesh depends upon some obstruction of the entrails, or verminous disposition of the body. Harvey.
- VERMINAROUS. adj. [vermis and pario, Lat.] Producing worms. Hereby they confound the generation of verminarous animals with oviparous. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
- VERNACULAR. adj. [vernaculus, Latin.] Native; of one's own country. London weekly bills number deep in consumptions; the same likewise proving inseparable accidents to most other diseases; which instances do evidently bring a consumption under the notion of a vernacular disease to England. Harvey. The histories of all our former wars are transmitted to us in our vernacular idiom. I do not find in any of our chronicles, that Edward the third ever reconnoiter'd the enemy, though he often discovered the posture of the French, and as often vanquished them. Addison.
- VERNAL. adj. [vernus, Latin.] Belonging to the spring. With the year Seasons return; but not to me returns, Or sight of vernal bloom, or summer's rose. Milton.
- VERNANT. n. f. [vernans, Lat.] Flourishing as in the spring. Elle had the spring Perpetual smil'd on earth, with vernant flow'rs, Equal in days and nights. Milton's Par. Lost.
- VERNALITY. n. f. [verna, Lat.] Servile carriage; the submissive fawning behaviour of a slave. Bailey.
- VERREL. See FERRULE.
- VERSABILITY. n. f. [versabilis, Lat.] Aptness to be turn'd
- VERSABLENESS. n. f. or wound any way. Dick.
- VERSAL. adj. [A cant word for universal.] Total; whole. Some for brevity, Have cast the versal world's nativity. Hudibras.
- VERSATILE. adj. [versatilis, Lat.] 1. That may be turned round.

VER

2. Changeable; variable.
One colour to us standing in one place, hath a contrary aspect in another; as in those versatile representations in the neck of a dove, and folds of scarlet. Glanville.
3. Easily applied to a new task.
VERSATILENESS. n. f. [from versatile.] The quality of being versatile. ing versatile.
- VERSE.* n. f. [from versus, Fr. versus, Latin.]
1. A line consisting of a certain succession of sounds, and number of syllables.
Thou hast by moonlight at her window sung,
With feigning voice, verses of feigning love. Shakef.
2. [from verset, Fr.] A section or paragraph of a book.
Thus far the questions proceed upon the construction of the first earth; in the following verses they proceed upon the demolition of that earth. Burnet.
3. Poetry; lays; metrical language.
Verse embalms virtue: and toms and thrones of rhymes Preserve frail transitory fame as much Donne.
As spice doth body from air's corrupt touch.
If envious eyes their hurtful rays have cast,
More powerful verse shall free thee from the blast. Dryden.
Whilst the did her various pow'r dispole;
Virtue was taught in verse, and Athens' glory rose. Prior.
You compose
In splay-foot verse, or hobbling prose. Prior.

Playing on pipes of corn, and versing love. Shakef.
To be VERSED. v. n. [from versus, Lat.] To be skilled in; to be acquainted with.
She might be ignorant of their nations, who was not versed in their names, as not being present at the general survey of animals, when Adam assigned unto every one a name concordant unto its nature. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
This, versed in death, th' infernal knight relates,
And then for proof fulfill'd their common fates. Dryden.
VERSEMAN. n. f. [verse and man.] A poet; a writer in verse.
The god of us versemen, you know, child, the sun. Prior.
VERSCLE. n. f. [versculus, Lat.] A little verse.
VERSIFICATION. n. f. [versification, Fr. from versify.] The art or practice of making verses.
Donne alone had your talent, but was not happy to arrive at your versification. Dryden.
Some object to his versification; which is in poetry, what colouring is in painting, a beautiful ornament. But if the proportions are just, though the colours should happen to be rough, the piece may be of ineffimable value. Glanville.
VERSIFICATION. n. f. [versificator, Fr. versificator, Lat.]
VERSIFIER. n. f. A versifier; a maker of verses with or without the spirit of poetry.
Statius, the best versificator next Virgil, knew not how to design after him. Dryden.
In Job and the Psalms we shall find more sublime ideas, more elevated language, than in any of the heathen versifiers of Greece or Rome. Watts's Improvement of the Mind.
To VERSIFY. v. n. [versifier, Fr. versifier, Latin.] To make verses.
You would wonder to hear how soon even children will begin to versify. Sidney.
To follow rather the Goths in rhyming, than the Greeks in true versifying, were even to eat acorns with wine, when we may freely eat wheat bread among men. Alpham.
I'll versify in spite, and do my best,
To make as much waste paper as the rest. Dryden.
To VERSIFY. v. a. To relate in verse.
Unintermix'd with fictitious fantasies, Shakef.
I'll versify the truth, not poetize. Daniel.
VERSION. n. f. [version, Fr. versio, Latin.]
1. Change; transformation.
Springs, the antients thought to be made by the version of air into water. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
2. Change of direction.
Comets are rather gazed upon, than wisely observed in their effects; that is, what kind of comet, for magnitude, colour, version of the beams, produceth what kind of effects. Bacon.
3. Translation.
This exact propriety of Virgil I particularly regarded; but must confess, that I have not been able to make him appear wholly like himself. For where the original is close, no version can reach it in the same compass. Dryden.
4. The act of translating.
VERT. n. f. [vertis, Fr.]
Vert, in the laws of the forest, signifies every thing that grows, and bears a green leaf within the forest, that may cover and hide a deer. Cowel.

The British youth shall hail thy wife command;
Thy temper'd ardour, and thy veteran skill. Thomson.
VETERINARIAN, n. f. [veterinarius, Latin.] One skilled in the diseases of cattle.
That a horse has no gall, is not only swallowed by common farriers, but also receiv'd by good veterinarians, and some who have laudably discou'ed upon horses. Brown.
TO VEX, v. a. [vexo, Latin.]
1. To plague; to torment; to harass.
Do you think
The king will suffer but the little finger
Of this man to be vex'd? Shakespeare. Hen. VIII.
Do poor Tom some charity, whom the foul fiend vexes. Shak.
When she press'd him daily, so that his soul was vexed unto death, he told her all his heart. Judges xvi. 16.
Of airy ghosts, and vex the gully train. Dryden.
You are the cause of all my care;
Your eyes ten thousand dangers dart;
Ten thousand torments vex my heart;
I love, and I despair. Prior.
2. To disturb; to disquiet.
Alack, 'tis he; why, he was met even now,
As mad as the vex sea; singing aloud. Shakespeare.
Rang'd on the banks beneath our equal oars,
White curl the waves, and the vex'd ocean roars. Pope.
3. To trouble with slight provocations.
VEXA'TION, n. f. [from vex.]
1. The act of troubling.
O that husband,
My supreme crown of grief, and those repeated vexations of it. Shakespeare. Cymbeline.
2. The state of being troubled; uneasiness; sorrow.
Vexation almost stops my breath.
That fondred friends greets in the hour of death. Shakespeare.
Passions too violent, instead of heightening our pleasures, afford us nothing but vexation and pain. Temple.
3. The cause of trouble or uneasiness.
Your children were vexation to your youth;
But mine shall be a comfort to your age. Shakespeare.
4. An act of harassing by law.
Albeit the party grieved thereby, may have some reason to complain of an untrue charge, yet may he not well call it an unjust vexation. Bacon.
5. A slight teasing trouble.
VEXA'TIOUS, adj. [from vexation.]
1. Afflictive; troublesome; causing trouble.
Consider him maintaining his usurped title, by continual vexations wars against the kings of Judah. South.
Vexatious thought still found my flying mind,
Nor bound by limits, nor to place confin'd;
Haunted my nights, and terrify'd my days;
Stalk'd through my gardens, and pursu'd my ways;
Nor shut from artful bow'r, nor lost in winding maze. Prior.
2. Full of trouble; full of uneasiness.
He leads a vexatious life, who in his noblest actions is to gored with cruples, that he dares not make a step without the authority of another. Digby.
3. Teasing; slightly troublesome.
VEXA'TIOUSLY, adv. [from vexatious.] Troublesomely; uneasily.
VEXA'TIOUSNESS, n. f. [from vexatious.] Troublesomeness; uneasiness.
VEXER, [from vex.] He who vexes.
UGLY, adv. [from ugly.] Filthily; with deformity; in such a manner as to raise dislike.
UGLINESS, n. f. [from ugly.]
1. Deformity; contrariety to beauty.

VIB

All that else seem'd fair and fresh in sight,
Was turned now to dreadful ugliness. Spenser.
She takes her topicks from the advantages of old age and ugliness. Dryden.
2. Turpitude; loathsomeness; moral depravity.
Their dull ribaldry cannot but be very nauseous and offensive to any one, who does not, for the sake of the fin itself, pardon the ugliness of its circumstances. South.
UGLY, adj. [This word was antiently written ough; whence Mr. Dier ingeniously deduces it from eyphlike; that is, like an ough, elf, or goblin. In Saxon oga is terror; and in Gothic ogan is to fear.] Deformed; offensive to the sight;
contrary to beautiful.
If Cassio do remain,
He hath a daily beauty in his life,
That makes me ugly. Shakespeare.
O, I have pass'd a miserable night,
So full of ugly fights, of ghastly dreams.
Was this the cottage, and the safe abode
Thou toldst me of? What grim aspects are these,
These ugly-headed monsters? Milton.
VIAL, n. f. [Phiala.] A small bottle.
Edward's seven sons
Were as seven vials of his sacred blood. Shakespeare.
You Gods! look down,
And from your sacred vials pour your grace
Upon my daughter's head. Shakespeare.
Take thou this vial, being then in bed,
And this distilled liquor drink thou off.
Another lamp burnt in an old marble sepulchre belonging to some of the antient Romans inclosed in a glass vial. Wilkins.
I placed a thin vial, well stopp'd up, within the smoke of the vapour, but nothing followed. Addison.
Chemical waters, that are each transparent, when separate, ferment into a thick troubled liquor, when mixed in the same vial. Addison.
TO VIAL, v. a. To inclose in a vial.
This she with precious vial'd liquors heals;
For which the shepherds at the festivals
Carol her goodness loud in rustick lays. Milton.
VIVAND, n. f. [vivanda, Fr. vivanda, Ital.] Food; meat dress'd.
The belly only like a gulf remain'd,
T' th' midst of the body idle and unactive,
Still cupboarding the vivand. Shakespeare.
No matter, since
They've left their vivands behind, for we have stomachs.
Wilt please you taste of what is here?
These are not fruits forbidden; no interdict
Defends the touching of these vivands pure;
Their taste no knowledge works, at least of evil. Milton.
From some sorts of food less pleasant to the taste, persons in health, and in no necessity of using such vivands, had better to abstain. Roy.
The tables in fair order spread;
Vivands of various kinds allure the taste,
Of choicest sort and favour; rich repast!
Pope.
VIVATICUM, n. f. [Latin.]
1. Provision for a journey.
2. The last rites used to prepare the passing soul for its departure.
TO VIBRATE, v. a. [vibro, Latin.]
1. To brandish; to move to and fro with quick motion.
2. To make to quiver.
Breath vocalized, that is vibrated or undulated, may differently affect the lips, and impress a swift tremulous motion, which breath passing smooth doth not. Holder.
TO VIBRATE, v. n.
1. To play up and down, or to and fro.
The air, compressed by the fall and weight of the quick-silver, would repel it a little upwards, and make it vibrate a little up and down. Boyle.
Do not all fixed bodies, when heated beyond a certain degree, emit light, and shine? And is not this emission performed by the vibrating motions of their parts? Newton.
2. To quiver.
The whisper, that to greatness fill too near,
Perhaps, yet vibrates on his sovereign's ear. Pope.
VIBRATION, n. f. [from vibro, Latin.] The act of moving, or being moved with quick reciprocations, or returns; the act of quivering.
It sparkled like the coal upon the altar, with the fervours of piety, the heats of devotion, and the sallies and vibrations of a harmless activity. South.
Do not the rays of light, in falling upon the bottom of the eye, excite vibrations in the tunica retina? Which vibra- tions being propagated along the solid fibres of the optic nerves into the brain, cause the sense of seeing. Newton.
Mild vibrations sooth the parted soul,
New to the dawning of celestial day. Thomson.
VICAR.

VIC

VICAR, n. f. [vicarius, Latin.]
1. The incumbent of an appropriated or impropriated benefice.
Procure the vicar
To stay for me at church, 'twixt twelve and one,
To give our hearts united ceremony. Shakespeare.
Yours is the prize;
The vicar my defeat, and all the village see. Dryden.
A landed youth, whom his mother would never suffer to look into a book for fear of spoiling his eyes, upon hearing the clergy decreed, what a contempt must he entertain, not only for his vicar at home, but for the whole order. Swift.
2. One who performs the functions of another; a substitute.
An archbishop may not only excommunicate and interdict his suffragans, but his vicar-general may do the same. Ayliffe.
VICARAGE, n. f. [from vicar.] The benefice of a vicar.
This gentleman lived in his vicarage to a good old age, and having never deserted his flock, died vicar of Bray. Swift.
VICA'RIOUS, adj. [vicarius, Latin.] Deputed; delegated; acting in the place of another.
The soul in the body is but a subordinate efficient, and vicarious and instrumental in the hands of the Almighty, being but his substitute in this regiment of the body. Hale.
What can be more unnatural, than for a man to rebel against the vicarious power of God in his soul. Norris.
VICARSHIP, n. f. [from vicar.] The office of a vicar.
VICE, n. f. [vitium, Latin.]
1. The course of action opposite to virtue; depravity of manners; inordinate life.
No spirit more grofs to love
Vice for itself. Milton.
The foundation of error will lie in wrong measures of probability; as the foundation of vice in wrong measures of good. Locke.
2. A fault; an offence. It is generally used for an habitual fault, not for a single enormity.
No vice, so simple, but assumes
Some mark of virtue on its outward parts. Shakespeare.
Yet my poor country
Shall have more vices than it had before;
More suffer by him that shall succeed.
Unprovoked appetite, a brutish vice. Milton.
I cannot blame him for inveighing so sharply against the vices of the clergy in his age. Dryden.
3. The fool, or punchinello of old shows.
I'll be with you again
In a trice, like to the old vice.
Your need to sustain;
Who with dagger of lath, in his rage and his wrath,
Cries, ah, ha! to the devil. Shakespeare.
His face made of brals, like a vice in a game. Tusser.
4. [Vice, Dutch.] A kind of small iron press with screws, used by workmen.
He found that marbles taught him percussion; bottle-screws,
the vice; whirlingigs, the axis in peritrochio. Arbutnot.
5. Gripe; grasp.
If I but bitt him once; if he come but within my vice. Shakespeare.
6. [Vice, Latin.] It is used in composition for one, qui vicem gerit, who performs, in his stead, the office of a superior, or who has the second rank in command: as a viceroi; vice-chancellor.
TO VICE, v. a. [from the noun.] To draw.
With all confidence he swears,
As he had seen't, or been an instrument
To vice you to't, that you have touch'd his queen Forbiddenly. Shakespeare's Winter Tale.
VICED, adj. [from viced.] Vitious; corrupt.
Be as a planetary plague, when Jove
Will o'er some high-vic'd city hang his poison
In the sick air. Shakespeare.
VICERENT, n. f. [vicem gerens, Latin.] A lieutenant;
one who is intrusted with the power of the superior, by whom he is deputed.
All precepts concerning kings are comprehended in these;
remember thou art a man; remember thou art God's viceregent. Bacon.
Employ it in unfeigned piety towards God; in unshaken duty to his viceregent; in hearty obedience to his church. Spenser.

VIC

Great Father of the gods, when for our crimes
Thou send'st some heavy judgment on the times;
Some tyrant king, the terror of his age,
The type and true viceregent of thy rage,
Thus punish. Dryden.
Thou great viceregent of the king;
In all affairs thou sole director. Swift.
VICERENT, adj. [viceregens, Latin.] Having a delegated power; acting by substitution.
Whom send I to judge thee? Whom but thee, Viceregent son! To thee I have transferr'd
All judgment, whether in heav'n, or earth, or hell. Milton.
VICERENCY, n. f. [from viceregent.] The office of a vicegerent; lieutenantcy; deputed power.
The authority of confidence stands founded upon its vice- gerency and deputation under God. South.
VICERCHANCELLOR, n. f. [vicechancellarius, Latin.] The second magistrate of the universities.
VICENARY, adj. [vicenarius, Latin.] Belonging to twenty. Bailey.
VICEROY, n. f. [viceroi, French.] He who governs in place of the king with regal authority.
Shall I, for lucre of the rest unvanquish'd,
Detract so much from that prerogative,
As to be call'd but viceroi of the whole? Shakespeare.
Mendoza, viceroi of Peru, was wont to say, that the government of Peru was the best place the king of Spain gave, save that it was somewhat too near Madrid. Bacon.
We are so far from having a king, that even the viceroi is generally absent four fifths of his time. Swift.
VICEROYALTY, n. f. [from viceroi.] Dignity of a viceroi.
These parts furnish out vice-royalties for the grantees; but in war are incumbances to the kingdom. Addison.
VICERY, n. f. [Of this word I know not well the meaning or original: a vice thing is now called in vulgar language, point vice, from the French perhaps, point de vice; whence the barbarous word vicety may be derived.] Nicety; exactness.
A word not used.
Here is to the fruit of Pem,
Grafted upon Stub his stem;
With the peakish nicety,
And old Sherwood's vicety. B. Johnson.
VICINITY, n. f. [vicinus, Latin.]
1. Nearness; state of being near.
The position of things is such, that there is a vicinity between agents and patients, that the one incessantly invades the other. Hale.
The abundance and vicinity of country seats. Swift.
2. Neighbourhood.
He shall find out and recall the wandering particles home,
and fix them in their old vicinity. Rogers.
Gravity alone must have carried them downwards to the vicinity of the sun. Bentley.
VICINAGE, n. f. [vicinia, Latin.] Neighbourhood; places adjoining.
VICINAL, adj. [vicinus, Latin.] Near; neighbouring.
Opening other vicine passages might obliterate any track;
as the making of one hole in the yielding mud, defaces the print of another near it. Glanville.
VICIOUS, adj. [from vice.] See VITIOUS. Devoted to vice;
not addicted to virtue.
He heard this heavy curse,
Servants of servants on his vicious race. Milton.
VICISSITUDE, [vicissitudo, Latin.]
1. Regular change; return of the same things in the same succession.
It makes through heav'n
Grateful vicissitudes, like day and night. Milton.
The rays of light are alternately disposed to be reflected or refracted for many vicissitudes. Newton.
This succession of things upon the earth, is the result of the vicissitude of seasons, and is as constant as is the cause of that vicissitude, the sun's declination. Woodward.
2. Revolution; change.
During the course of the war, did the vicissitudes of good and bad fortune affect us with humility or thankfulness. Atterb.
Verle sweetens toil, however rude the sound,
All at her work the village maiden sings;
Nor as she turns the giddy wheel around,
Revolves the sad vicissitude of things. Giffard.
VICINTIENS, In law vicintial rents are certain farms, for which the sheriff pays a rent to the king, and makes what profit he can of them. Vicintial writs are such writs as are triable in the county court, before the sheriff. Bailey.
VICTIM, n. f. [victima, Latin.]
1. A sacrifice; something slain for a sacrifice.
All that were authors of so black a deed,
Be sacrific'd as victims to his ghost. Denham.
And on the victim pour the ruddy wine. Dryden.
Clitumnus' waves, for triumphs after war,
The victim ox, and snowy sheep prepare. Addison.
2. Some

VIE

2. Something destroyed.
Behold where age's wretched victim lies;
See his head trembling, and his half-clos'd eyes. Prior.
VICTOR. n. f. [viator, Lat.] Conqueror; vanquisher; he that gains the advantage in any contest. Victor is seldom used with a genitive, and never but with regard to some single action or person. We rarely say Alexander was victor of Darius, though we say he was victor at Arbela; but we never say he was victor of Persia.
This strange race more strange conceits did yield;
Who victor seem'd, was to his ruin brought;
Who seem'd o'erthrown, was mistress of the field. Sidney.
Some time the flood prevails, and then the wind,
Both tugging to be victors, breast to breast,
Yet neither conqueror, nor conquered. Shakefp.
Although the victor, we submit to Caesar. Shakefp.
Say where and when
Their fight; what stroke shall bruise the victor's heel. Milt.
Our Hebrew songs and harps in Babylon,
That pleas'd to well our victors ear, declare That rather Greece from us these arts deriv'd. Milton.
Their hearts at last the vanquish'd re-assume,
And now the victors fall. Denham.
In love the victors from the vanquish'd fly;
They fly that wound, and they pursue that die. Waller.
Fortune's unjust; the ruins of the brave,
And him who should be victor, makes the slave. Dryden.
Lose not a thought on me, I'm out of danger;
Heaven will not leave me in the victor's hand. Addison.
VICTORIOUS. adj. [victriosus, Fr.]
1. Conquering; having obtained conquest; superiour in contest. Victory doth more often fall by error of the vanquish'd, than by the valour of the victorious. Hayward.
The great son return'd victorious with his pains. Milton.
That happy fun, said he, will rise again,
Who twice victorious did our navy see:
And I alone must view him rise in vain,
Without one ray of all his star for me. Dryden.
2. Producing conquest.
Sudden these honours shall be snatch'd away,
And curs'd for ever this victorious day. Pope.
3. Betokening conquest.
Now are our brows bound with victorious wreaths;
Our bruited arms hung up for monuments. Shakefp.
VICTORIOUSLY. adv. [from victorious.] With conquest; successfully; triumphantly.
That grace will carry us, if we do not wilfully betray our succours, victoriously through all difficulties. Hammond.
VICTORIOUSNESS. n. f. [from victorious.] The state or quality of being victorious.
VICTORY. n. f. [victoria, Lat.] Conquest; success in contest; triumph.
At his nurse's tears
He whin'd and roar'd away your victory,
That pages blush'd at him. Shakefp.
Then to the heav'n of heav'n's he shall ascend
With victory, triumphing o'er his foes. Milton.
Obedience is a complicated act of virtue, and many graces are exercised in one act of obedience. It is an act of humility, of mortification and self-denial, of charity to God, of care of the publick, of order and charity to ourselves. It is a great instance of a victory over the most refractory passions. Taylor.
VICTRESS. n. f. [from victor.] A female that conquers.
I'll lead thy daughter to a conqueror's bed;
And she shall be sole victress; Caesar's Caesar. Shakefp.
VICTUAL. n. f. [viaticum, Fr. vittuagium, Ital.] Provision VICTUALS. n. f. of food; stores for the support of life; meat; sustenance.
He landed in these islands, to furnish himself with victuals and fresh water. Abbot's Descrip. of the World.
You had musty victuals, and he hath help to eat it: he hath an excellent stomach. Shakefp.
He was not able to keep that place three days for lack of victual. Knolles.
They, unprovided of tackling and victual, are forced to sea by a storm. K. Charles.
To VICTUAL. v. a. [from the noun.] To store with provision for food.
Talbot, farewell;
I must go victual Orleans forthwith. Shakefp.
VICTUALLER. n. f. [from victuals.] One who provides victuals.
They planted their artillery against the haven, to impeach supply of victuals; yet the English victuallers surceased not to bring all things necessary. Hayward.
Their conquest half is to the victualler due. King.
VIDELICET. adv. [Latin.] To wit; that is. This word is generally written viz.
VIDUITY. n. f. [from viduus, Lat.] Widowhood.
To VIE. v. a. [Of this word the etymology is very uncertain.]
1. To show, or practice in competition.
They vie power and expence with those that are too high. L'Estrange.

VIE

- You vie happiness in a thousand easy and sweet diversions. Evlyn.
2. In this passage the meaning seems to be, to add; to accumulate.
She hung about my neck, and kiss on kiss
That in a twink she won me to her love. Shakefp.
To VIE. v. n. To contend; to contend; to strive for superiority.
In a trading nation, the younger sons may be placed in such a way of life, as may enable them to vie with the best of their family. Addison.
The wool, when shaded with Ancona's dye,
May with the proudest Tyrian purple vie. Addison.
Now voices over voices rise;
While each to be the loudest vies. Swift.
To VIEW. v. a. [veu, Fr. from voir, or voir.]
1. To survey; to look on by way of examination.
Go, and view the country. Jos. vii. 2.
Th' almighty father bent down his eye,
His own works and their works at once to view. Milton.
View not this spire, by measures giv'n,
To buildings rais'd by common hands. Prior.
Where'er we view some well-proportion'd dome;
No single parts unequally surprize;
All comes united to th' admiring eyes. Pope.
2. To see; to perceive by the eye.
With eyes aghast
View'd first their lamentable lot.
No more I hear, no more I view,
The phantom flies me, as unkind as you, Pope.
VIEW. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. Prospect.
You should tread a course Pretty, and full of view; yea, haply, near
The residence of Pothumus. Shakefp. Cymbeline.
Vast and indefinite views, which drown all apprehensions of the uttermost objects, are condemned by good authors. Watson.
The walls of Pluto's palace are in view. Dryden.
Cut wide views through mountains to the plain,
You'll wish your hill, or shelter'd hill again. Pope.
2. Sight; power of beholding.
Some safer resolution I've in view. Milton.
I go, to take for ever from your view,
Both the lov'd object, and the hated too. Dryden.
These things duly weigh'd, will give us a clear view into the state of human liberty. Locke.
3. Act of seeing.
Th' unexpected found
Of dogs and men, his wakeful ear does wound;
Rous'd with the noise, he scarce believes his ear,
Willing to think th' illusions of his fear
Had giv'n this false alarm; but straight his view Confirms that more than all he fears is true. Denham.
Objects near our view are thought greater than those of a larger size, that are more remote. Locke.
4. Sight; eye.
She was not much struck with those objects that now presented themselves to her view. Female Quixote.
5. Survey; examination by the eye.
Time never will renew,
While we too far the pleasing path pursue,
Surveying nature with too nice a view. Dryden.
6. Intellectual survey.
If the mind has made this inference by finding out the intermediate ideas, and taking a view of the connection of them, it has proceeded rationally. Locke.
7. Space that may be taken in by the eye; reach of sight.
The fame through all the neighb'ring nations flew,
When now the Trojan navy was in view. Dryden.
8. Appearance; show.
In that accomplish'd mind,
Helpt by the night, new graces find;
Which, by the splendour of her view,
Dazzl'd before we never knew. Waller.
9. Display; exhibition to the sight or mind.
To give a right view of this mistaken part of liberty, would any one be a changeling, because he is less determined by wife considerations than a wife man? Locke.
10. Prospect of interest.
No man sets himself about any thing, but upon some view or other, which serves him for a reason. Locke.
11. Intention; design.
He who sojourns in a foreign country, refers what he sees to the state of things at home; with that view he makes all his reflections. Atterbury.
With a view to commerce, in returning from his expedition against the Parthians, he passed through Egypt. Arabian Nights.

VIG

- VIEWLESS. adj. [from view.] Unseen; not discernible by the sight.
To be imprison'd in the viewless winds,
And blown with restless violence about
The pendant world. Shakefp.
Each stair mysteriously was meant, nor stood
There always, but drawn up to heav'n sometimes. Milton's Par. Lost.
VIEWLESS. n. f. [from viewless.] The act of putting to death every twentieth man. Bailey.
VIEWLESS. n. f. [from viewless.] The act of putting to death every twentieth man. Bailey.
VIGIL. n. f. [vigilia, Latin.]
1. Watch; devotions performed in the customary hours of rest. So they in heaven their odes and vigils tun'd. Milton.
Shrines! where their vigils pale-cy'd virgins keep,
And pitying faints, whose statues learn to weep. Pope.
2. A fast kept before a holiday.
He that out-lives this day, and sees old age,
Will yearly on the vigil feast his neighbours,
And say to-morrow is St. Crispian. Shakefp.
3. Service used on the night before a holiday.
No altar is to be consecrated without reliques, which placed before the church door, the vigils are to be celebrated that night before them. Stillington.
The rivals call my muse another way,
To sing their vigils for th' ensuing day. Dryden.
4. Watch; forbearance of sleep.
Though Venus and her ion shou'd spare
Her rebel heart, and never teach her care;
Yet Hymen may perforce her vigils keep,
And for another's joy suspend her sleep. Waller.
Nothing wears out a fine face like the vigils of the card-table, and those cutting passions which attend them. Addison.
VIGILANCE. n. f. [vigilance, Fr. vigilantia, Lat.]
VIGILANCY. n. f. [from vigilance.]
1. Forbearance of sleep.
Ulysses yielded unseasonably to sleep, and the strong passion for his country should have given him vigilance. Broome.
2. Watchfulness; circumspection; incessant care.
Shall Henry's conquest, Bedford's vigilance,
Your deeds of war, and all our council die? Shakefp.
No post is free, no place,
That guard and most unusual vigilance
Does not attend my taking. Shakefp. K. Lear.
In their military care, there were few remarkable occasions under the duke, saving his continual vigilance, and voluntary hazard of his person. Watson.
Of these the vigilance
I dread; and to elude, thus wrapp'd in mist
Of midnight vapour, glide obscure.
We are enabled to subdue all other creatures; and are able for our behoof the strength of the ox, the sagacity and vigilancy of the dog. Ray.
3. Guard; watch.
In at this gate none pass
The vigilance here plac'd, but such as come Well known from heav'n. Milton.
VIGILANT. adj. [vigilans, Latin.] Watchful; circumspect; diligent; attentive.
They have many prayers, but every of them very short, as if they were darts thrown out with a kind of sudden quickness; lest that vigilant and erect attention of mind, which in prayer is very necessary, should be wasted or dulled through continuance. Hooker.
Take your places, and be vigilant:
If any noise or soldier you perceive,
Let us have knowledge. Shakefp. Henry V.
The treasurer, as he was vigilant in such cases, had notice of the clerk's expiration so soon, that he procured the king to send a message to the master of the rolls. Clarend.
VIGILANTLY. adv. [from vigilant.] Watchfully; attentively; circumspectly.
Thus in peace, either of the kings so vigilantly observed every motion of the others, as if they had lived upon the alarm. Hayward.
VIGOROUS. adj. [from vigor, Latin.] Forcible; not weakened; full of strength and life.
Fam'd for his valour young;
At sea successful, vigorous and strong!
Their appetite is not dull'd by being gratified, but returns always fresh and vigorous. Atterbury.
VIGOROUSLY. adv. [from vigorous.] With force; forcibly; without weakness.
The prince had two giant ships;
With his one so vigorously he press'd,
And flew so home, they could not rise again. Dryden.
If the fire burns bright and vigorously, it is no matter by what means it was at first kindled. South.

VIL

- That prince whose cause you espouse so vigorously, is the principal in the war, and you but a second. Swift.
VIGOROUSNESS. n. f. [from vigorous.] Force; strength.
He hath given excellent succourance and vigorousness to the sufferers, arming them with strange courage, heroic fortitude, invincible resolution, and glorious patience. Taylor.
VIGOUR. n. f. [vigor, Lat.]
1. Force; strength.
Sometimes went and sometimes ran,
With supple joints, as lively vigour led. Milton.
Shame to be overcome,
Wou'd utmost vigour raise, and rais'd unite. Milton.
Pernicious fire wither'd all their strength,
And of their wonted vigour left them drain'd. Milton.
The mind and spirit remains Invincible, and vigour soon returns. Milton.
No deep within her gulf can hold Immortal vigour. Milton.
The vigour of this arm was never vain:
Witness these heaps of slaughter. Dryden.
2. Mental force; intellectual ability.
3. Energy; efficacy.
In the fruitful earth
His beams, unactive else, their vigour find.
How does Cartesius all his finews strain,
The earth's attractive vigour to explain? Blackmore.
VILE. adj. [vil, Fr. vilis, Lat.] Base; mean; worthless; sordid; despicable.
Our case were miserable, if that wherewith we most endeavour to please God, were in his sight so vile and despicable as men's disdainful speech would make it. Hooker.
I disdainful scorn'd, and craved death,
Rather than I would be so vile esteem'd. Shakefp.
He to-day that sheds his blood with me,
Shall be my brother; he he ne'er so vile,
This day shall gentle his condition.
The inhabitants account gold but as a vile thing.
That sinful creature man ejected is,
And in our place the heavens possess he must;
Vile man, begot of clay, and born of dust. Fairfax.
A spontaneous production is against matter of fact; a thing without example not only in man, but the vilest of weeds. Bentl.
2. Morally impure; wicked.
Restor'd by thee, vile as I am, to place
Of new acceptance. Milton.
VILED. adj. [from vile, whence revile.] Abusive; scurrilous; defamatory.
He granted life to all except to one, who had used vile speeches against king Edward. Hayward.
VILELY. adv. [from vile.] Basely; meanly; shamefully.
The Volicians vilely yielded the town. Shakefp.
How can I
Forget my Hector, treated with dishonour, Depriv'd of funeral rites, and vilely dragg'd,
A bloody corse, about the walls of Troy. A. Philips.
VILENESS. n. f. [from vile.]
1. Baseness; meanness; despicableness.
His vileness us shall never awe:
But here our sports shall be:
Such as the golden world first saw,
Most innocent and free. Drayton.
Reflect on the essential vileness of matter, and its impotence to conserve its own being. Creech.
Considering the vileness of the clay, I wondered that no tribune of that age durst ever venture to ask the potter, what dost thou make? Swift.
2. Moral or intellectual baseness.
Then, vileness of mankind!
Could one, alas! repeat me good or great,
Wash my pale body, or bewail my fate? Prior.
To VILIFY. v. a. [from vile.] To debase; to defame; to make contemptible.
Tomalin could not abide,
To hear his sovereign vilify'd. Drayton.
Their maker's image
Forlook them, when themselves they vilify'd
To serve ungovern'd appetite; and took His image whom they serv'd. Milton.
The displeasure of their prince, those may expect, who would put in practice all methods to vilify his person. Addison.
Many passions dispose us to deprecate and vilify the merit of one rising in the esteem of mankind. Addison.
VILL. n. f. [villa, Fr. villa, Latin.] A village; a small collection of houses. Little in use.
This book gives an account of the manurable lands in every manor, town, or vill. Hale.
VILLA. n. f. [villa, Lat.] A country seat.
The antient Romans lay the foundations of their villas and palaces within the very borders of the sea. Addison.
All vast possessions; just the same the case,
Whether you call them villas, parks, or chace. Pope.
29 F VILLAGE.

VIL

VILLAGE. n. f. [village, Fr.] A small collection of houses in the country, less than a town.
Beggars, with roaring voices, from low farms,
Or pelting villages, sheep coats, and mills,
Inforce their charity. Shakespeare.
The early village cock
Hath twice done salutation to the morn.
You have many enemies, that know not
Why they are so; but, like the village curs, Bark when their fellows do. Shakespeare.
The country villages were burnt down to the ground. Knolles.
Those village-words give us a mean idea of the thing. Dryd.
Seam'd o'er with wounds which his own fabre gave,
In the vile habit of a village slave. Pope.
VILLAGER. n. f. [from village.] An inhabitant of the village.
Brutus had rather be a villager,
Than to repute himself a son of Rome
Under such hard conditions. Shakespeare.
When once her eye
Hath met the virtue of this magick dust,
I shall appear some harmless villager,
Whom thrift keeps up about his country gear. Milton.
If there are conveniences of life, which common use reaches not, it is not reason to reject them, because every villager doth not know them. Locke.
VILLAGE. n. f. [from village.] District of villages.
Robin Goodfellow, are you not he,
That fright the maidens of the villagery? Shakespeare.
VILLAIN. n. f. [villain, Fr. villanus, low Latin.]
1. One who held by a base tenure.
The Irish inhabiting the lands fully conquered, being in condition of slaves and villains, did render a greater revenue, than if they had been made the king's free subjects. Davies.
2. A wicked wretch.
We were prevented by a dozen armed knights, or rather villains, who, using this time of their extreme feebleness, all together set upon them.
O villain! villain! his very opinion in the letter. Abhorred villain! unnatural, detested, brutish villain! Shakespeare.
What in the world,
That names me traitor, villain-like he lies. Shakespeare.
He was stabbed to the heart by the hand of a villain, upon the mere impious pretence of his being odious to the parliament. Clarendon.
Calm thinking villains, whom no faith could fix;
Of crooked counsels, and dark politicks. Pope.
VILLANAGE. n. f. [from villain.]
1. The state of a villain; base servitude.
They exercise most bitter tyranny,
Upon the parts brought into their bondage:
No wretchedness is like to sinful villanage. Fairy Queen.
Upon every such surrender and grant, there was but one freholder, which was the lord himself; all the rest were but tenants in villanage, and were not fit to be sworn in juries. Davies.
2. Baseness; infamy.
If in thy smoke it ends, their glories shine;
But infamy and villanage are thine. Dryden.
To VILLANIZE. v. a. [from villain.] To debase; to degrade;
to defame.
Were virtue by descent, a noble name
Could never villanize his father's fame;
But, as the first, the last of all the line,
Would, like the sun, ev'n in descending shine. Dryden.
These are the fools, whose stolidity can baffle all arguments; whose glory is in their shame, in the debasing and villanizing of mankind to the condition of beasts. Bentley.
VILLANOUS. adj. [from villain.]
1. Base; vile; wicked.
2. Sorry.
Thou art my son; I have partly thy mother's word, partly my own opinion; but chiefly a villanous trick of thine eye doth warrant me. Shakespeare.
3. It is used by Shakespeare to exaggerate any think detestable.
We shall lose our time,
And all be turn'd to barnacles or apes,
With foreheads villanous low. Shakespeare. Tempest.
VILLANOUSLY. adv. [from villanous.] Wickedly; basely.
The wandering Numidian falsified his faith, and villanously slew Selymes the king, as he was bathing himself. Knolles.
VILLANOUSNESS. n. f. [from villanous.] Baseness; wickedness.
VILLANY. n. f. [from villain; villomnie, old French.]
1. Wickedness; baseness; depravity.
Trust not those cunning waters of his eyes;
For villany is not without such a rheum:
And he, long traded in it, makes it seem Like rivers of remorse and innocence. Shakespeare.
He is the prince's jester; and the commendation is not in his wit, but in his villany. Shakespeare.
2. A wicked action; a crime.

VIN

No villany, or flagitious action was ever yet committed;
but a lie was first or last the principal engine to effect it. South.
Such villanies rous'd Horace into wrath;
And 'tis more noble to pursue his path,
Than an old tale. Dryden.
VILLA'TICK. adj. [villaticus, Lat.] Belonging to villages.
Evening dragon came,
Affailant on the perched roofs,
And nets in order rang'd,
Of tame villatick fowl. Milton.
VILLI. n. f. [Latin.]
In anatomy, are the same as fibres; and in botany, small hairs like the grain of pluff or fluff, with which, as a kind of excrecence, some trees do abound. Quincy.
VILLOUS. adj. [villofus, Lat.] Shaggy; rough.
The liquor of the stomach, which with fasting grows sharp, and the quick sensation of the inward villous coat of the stomach, seem to be the cause of the sense of hunger. Arb.
VIMINEOUS. adj. [vimineus, Latin.] Made of twigs.
As in the hive's vimineous dome,
Ten thousand bees enjoy their home;
Each does her studious action vary,
To go and come, to fetch and carry. Prior.
VINCIBLE. adj. [from vincere, Lat.] Conquerable; supe-rable.
He not vincible in spirit, and well assured that shortness of provision would in a short time draw the feditious to shorter limits, drew his sword. Hayward.
Because 'twas absolutely in my power to have attended more heedfully, there was liberty in the principle, the mistake which influenced the action was vincible. Norris.
VINCIBLENESS. n. f. [from vincible.] Liableness to be overcome. Diit.
VINCTURE. n. f. [vinctura, Lat.] A binding. Baile.
VINDEMIAL. adj. [vindemia, Latin.] Belonging to a vintage.
To VINDEMIATE. v. n. [vindemia, Latin.] To gather the vintage.
Now vindemiate, and take your bees towards the expiration of this month. Boeyn.
VINDEMIATION. n. f. [vindemia, Lat.] Grape-gathering. Baile.
To VINDICATE. v. a. [vindicare, Lat.]
1. To justify; to support; to maintain.
Where the respondent denies any proposition, the opponent must directly vindicate and confirm that proposition; i. e. he must make that proposition the conclusion of his next syl-logism. Watts's Improvement of the Mind.
2. To revenge; to avenge.
We ought to have added, how far an holy war is to be pursued; whether to enforce a new belief, and to vindicate or punish infidelity? Bacon.
Man is not more inclinable to obey God than man; but God is more powerful to exact subjection, and to vindicate rebellion. Pearson on the Creed.
The more numerous the offenders are, the more his justice is concerned to vindicate the affront. Tillotson.
Asssemble ours, and all the Theban race,
To vindicate on Athens thy disgrace. Dryden.
3. To assert; to claim with efficacy.
Never any touch'd upon this way, which our poet justly has vindicated to himself. Dryden's Pref. to Ovid.
The beauty of this town, without a fleet,
From all the world shall vindicate her trade. Dryden.
4. To clear; to protect.
God's ways of dealing with us, are by proposition of terrors and promises. To these is added the authority of the commander, vindicated from our neglect by the interposition of the greatest signs and wonders, in the hands of his prophets, and of his son. Hammond.
I may assert eternal providence,
And vindicate the ways of God to man. Milton.
VINDICATION. n. f. [vindicatio, Fr. from vindicare.] Defence; assertion; justification.
This is no vindication of her conduct. She still acts a mean part, and, through fear, becomes an accomplice, in endeavouring to betray the Greeks. Brown.
VINDICATIVE. adj. [from vindicare.] Revengful; given to revenge.
He, in heat of action,
Is more vindicative than jealous love. Shakespeare.
Publick revenges are for the most part fortunate; but in private revenges it is not so. Vindicative persons live the life of witches, who, as they are mischievous, so end they unfortunate. Bacon.
The fruits of adust choler, and the evaporations of a vindicative spirit. Howel.
Do not too many believe no zeal to be spiritual, but what is censorious or vindicative? Whereas no zeal is spiritual, that is not also charitable. Sprat's Sermon.
Distinguish betwixt a passion purely vindicative, and those counsels where divine justice avenges the innocent. L'Estrange.
VINDICATOR.

VIN

VINDICATOR. n. f. [from vindicare.] One who vindicates;
an assertor.
He treats tyranny, and the vices attending it, with the utmost rigour; and consequently a noble soul is better pleas'd with a jealous vindicator of Roman liberty, than with a temperizing poet. Dryden.
VINDICATORY. adj. [from vindicare.]
1. Punitory; performing the office of vengeance.
The afflictions of Job were no vindicatory punishments to take vengeance of his sins, but probatory chastisements to make trial of his graces. Bramhall's Answer to Hobbs.
2. Defensory; justificatory.
VINDICTIVE. adj. [from vindicta, Latin.] Given to revenge;
revengful.
I am vindictive enough to repel force by force. Dryden.
Angustus was of a nature too vindictive, to have contented himself with so small a revenge. Dryden.
VINE. n. f. [vinum, Latin.] The plant that bears the grape.
The flower consists of many leaves placed in a regular order, and expanding in form of a rose; the ovary, which is situated in the bottom of the flower, becomes a round fruit, full of juice, and contains many small stones in each.
The tree is climbing, sending forth claspers at the joints, by which it fastens itself to what plant stands near it, and the fruit is produced in bunches. The species are, 1. The wild vine, commonly called the claret grape. 2. The July grape. 3. The Corinth grape, vulgarly called the currant grape. 4. The parley leav'd grape. 5. The miller's grape. This is called the Burgundy in England; the leaves of this sort are very much powdered with white in the spring, from whence it had the name of miller's grape. 6. Is what is called in Burgundy Pineau, and at Orleans, Auverna: it makes very good wine. 7. The white chafflas, or royal muscadine: it is a large white grape; the juice is very rich. 8. The black chafflas, or black muscadine; the juice is very rich. 9. The 31. The Alicante grape. 32. The white Auvernat. 33. The grey Auvernat. 34. The raisin muscat. The late duke of Tuscany, who was very curious in collecting all the sorts of Italian and Greek grapes into his vineyards, was possessed of upwards of three hundred several varieties. Miller.

The vine-prop elm, the poplar never dry. Fairy Queen.
In her days every man shall eat in safety,
Under his own vine, what he plants. Shakespeare.
The captain left of the poor to be vine-dressers. 2 Kings xxv.
Depending vines the helving cavern screen,
With purple clusters blushing through the green. Pope.
VINEGAR. n. f. [vinagre, Fr.]
1. Wine grown sour.
Vinegar is made by setting the vessel of wine against the hot sun; and therefore vinegar will not burn, much of the finer parts being exhaled. Bacon.
Heav'n's blest beam turns vinegar more four. Pope.
2. Any thing really or metaphorically sour.
Some laugh like parrots at a bag-piper,
And others of such vinegar aspect,
That they'll not show their teeth in way of smile. Shakespeare.
VINNEWED. or VINNEY. adj. Mouldy. Ainsworth.
VINEYARD. n. f. [vinetum, Saxon.] A ground planted with vines.
Let us not live in France; let us quit all,
And give our vineyards to a barbarous people. Shakespeare.
Though some had so forfeited in the vineyards, and with the vines, that they had been left behind, the generosity of the Spaniards sent them all home again. Clarendon.
VINOUS. adj. [from vinum, Latin.] Having the qualities of wine; consisting of wine.
The motion of the oily drops may be in part due to some partial solution made by the vinous spirit. Boyle.
Water will imbibe
The small remains of spirit, and acquire A vinous flavour. Philips.
VINAGE. n. f. [vinage, Fr.] The produce of the vine for the year.
The best wines are in the driest vineyards. Bacon.
Our first success in war make Bacchus crown,
And half the vintage of the year our own. Waller.
VINTAGER. n. f. [from vinage.] He who gathers the vintage. Ainsworth.
VINTNER. n. f. [from vinum, Lat.] One who sells wine.

VIO

The vintner may draw what religion he pleases. Howel.
The vintner, by mixing poison with his wines, destroys more lives than any malignant disease. Swift.
VINTRY. n. f. The place where wine is sold. Ainsworth.
VIOL. n. f. [violle, Fr. viola, Ital.] A fringed instrument of musick.
My tongue's use is to me no more,
Than an untringed viol, or a harp. Shakespeare.
To strain a string, stop it with the finger, as in the necks of lutes and viols. Bacon.
Loud o'er the rest Cremona's trumpet doth sound;
Me softer airs besit, and softer strings
Of lute, or viol, still more apt for mournful things. Milton.
VIOLABLE. adj. [from violabilis, Lat.] Such as may be violated or hurt.
VIOLA'CEOUS. adj. [from viola, Lat.] Resembling violets.
To VIOLATE. v. a. [violare, Lat.]
1. To injure; to hurt.
I question thy bold entrance,
Employ'd to violate the sleep of those Whose dwelling God hath planted here in bliss. Milton.
Kindness for man, and pity for his fate,
May mix with bliss, and yet not violate. Dryden.
Cease
To know what known will violate thy peace. Pope.
2. To infringe; to break any thing venerable.
Some of violated vows
Twixt the souls of friend and friend. Shakespeare.
Those offences which are by their special qualities breaches of supernatural laws, do also, for that they are generally evil, violate in general that principle of reason, which willett universally to fly from evil. Hooker.
3. To injure by irreverence.
I would violate my own arm rather than a church. Brown.
Forbid to violate the sacred fruit. Milton.
4. To ravish; to deflower.
The Sabines violated charms
Obscured the glory of his rising arms. Prior.
VIOLA'TION. n. f. [violatio, Lat.]
1. Infringement or injury of something sacred.
Their right conceit that to perjury vengeance is due, was not without good effect, as touching the course of their lives, who feared the wilful violation of oaths. Hooker.
Men, who had no other guide but their reason, considered the violation of an oath to be a great crime. Addison.
2. Rape; the act of deflowering.
If your pure maidens fall into the hand
Of hot and forcing violation. Shakespeare.
VIOLA'TOR. n. f. [violator, Lat.]
1. One who injures or infringes something sacred.
May such places, built for divine worship, derive a blessing upon the head of the builders, as lasting as the curse that never fails to rest upon the sacrilegious violators of them. South.
2. A ravisher.
Angelo is an adul'terous thief,
An hypocrite, a virgin violator. Shakespeare.
How does the subject herself to the violator's upbraidings and insults. Clarissa.
VI'OLENCE. n. f. [violencia, Latin.]
1. Force; strength applied to any purpose.
To be imprison'd in the viewless winds,
And blown with restless violence about.
All the elements
At least had gone to wreck, disturb'd and torn
With violence of this conflict, had not soon
Th' eternal hung his golden scales. Milton.
2. An attack; an assault; a murder.
A noise did scare me from the tomb;
And she, too desperate, would not go with me:
But, as it seems, did violence on herself. Shakespeare.
3. Outrage; unjust force.
Grieved at his heart, when looking down he saw
The whole earth fill'd with violence; and all flesh Corrupting each their way. Milton's Par. Lost.
4. Eagerness; vehemence.
That seal
You ask with such violence, the king
With his own hand gave me. Shakespeare.
5. Injury; infringement.
We cannot, without offering violence to all records, divine and human, deny an universal deluge. Burnet.
6. Forceful deforation.
VI'OLENT. adj. [violentus, Lat.]
1. Forceful; acting with strength.
A violent cross wind blows. Milton.
2. Produced or continued by force.
The posture we find them in, according to his doctrine, must be look'd upon as unnatural and violent; and no violent state can be perpetual. Burnet.
3. Not natural, but brought by force.
Conqueror death discovers them scarce men;
Violent or shameful death their due reward. Milton.
4. Un-

VIR

4. Unjustly assailant; murderous.
Some violent hands were laid on Humphry's life. Shakefp.
A foe subtle or violent. Milton.
5. Unfeignably vehement.
We might be reckoned fierce and violent, to tear away that, which, if our mouths did condemn, our consciences would storm and repine thereat. Hooker.
The covetous extortioner should remember, that such vio-
lents shall not take heaven, but hell by force. Decay of Piety.
6. Extorted; not voluntary.
Vows made in pain, are violent and void. Milton.
VIOLENTLY, adv. [from violent.] With force; forcibly; vehemently.
Temp'rately proceed to what you would.
Thus violently redress. Shakefp. Coriolanus.
Flame burneth more violently towards the sides, than in the midst. Bacon.
Ancient privileges must not, without great necessities, be revoked, nor forfeitures be exacted violently, nor penal laws urged rigorously. Taylor's Rule of living holy.
- VIOLET, n. f. [viollette, Fr. viola, Lat.] A plant.
It hath a polypetalous anomalous flower, somewhat resembling the papilionaceous flower; for its two upper petals represent the standard, the two side ones the wings; but the lower one, which ends in a tail, resembles the iris. Out of the empalement arises the pointal, which becomes a three-cornered fruit opening into three parts, and full of roundish seeds. There are nine species. Miller.
When daisies pied, and violets blue,
Do paint the meadows much bedight. Shakefp.
Sweet echo, sweetest nymph that liv'st unseen,
By flow Meander's margent green,
And in the violet-embroider'd vale. Milton.
It alters not our simple idea, whether we think that blue be in the violet itself, or in our mind only; and only the power of producing it by the texture of its parts, to be in the violet itself. Locke.
- VIOLIN, n. f. [violon, Fr. from viol.] A fiddle; a stringed instrument of musick.
Praise with timbrels, organs, flutes;
Praise with violins, and lutes. Sandys.
Sharp violins proclaim
Their jealous pangs, and desperation,
For the fair disdainful dame. Dryden.
- VIOLINIST, n. f. [from viol.] A player on the viol.
- VIOLOCE'LLO, n. f. [Italian.] A stringed instrument of musick.
- VIPER, n. f. [vipera, Lat.]
1. A serpent of that species which brings its young alive, of which most are poisonous.
A viper came out of the heat, and fastened on his hand. Acts xxviii.
3. He'll gall of asps with thrifty lips suck in;
The viper's deadly teeth shall pierce his skin. Sandys.
Viper-catchers have a remedy, in which they place such great confidence, as to be no more afraid of the bite of a viper, than of a common puncture. This is no other than axungia viperina, presently rubbed into the wound. Derham.
2. Any thing mischievous.
Where is this viper,
That would depopulate the city, and
Be every man himself? Shakefp. Coriolanus.
- VIPERINE, n. f. [viperinus, Lat.] Belonging to a viper.
- VIPEROUS, adj. [viperous, Lat. from viper.] Having the qualities of a viper.
My tender years can tell,
Civil dissention is a viperous worm,
That gnaws the bowels of the commonwealth. Shakefp.
We are peremptory to dispatch
This viperous traitor. Shakefp.
Some viperous critick may bereave
Th' opinion of thy worth for some defect. Daniel's Musaph.
- VIPER'S BUGLOSS, n. f. [echium, Lat.] A plant.
The characters are, the cup of the flower is large, and divided into five long slender segments; the flower consists of one leaf, is shaped like a funnel, and somewhat inflected, having its upper part stretched, but in a greater length than the lower: the upper part, or galea of the flower, is divided into two; and the lower part, or beard, into three parts: in the middle of the flower are produced five stamina (or threads) which are reflexed. Each flower is succeeded by four seeds, which are in form of a viper's head. Miller.
- VIPER'S GRASS, n. f. [scorzonera, Lat.] A plant.
It hath a semi-flocculous flower, consisting of many half florets, which rest upon the embryos, which are included in one common empalement, which is scaly: the embryos afterwards become oblong seeds, which are furnished with down. Miller.
- VIRAGO, n. f. [Latin.]
1. A female warrior; a woman with the qualities of a man.
Melpomene represented like a virago or manly lady, with a majestic and grave countenance. Peacham.

VIR

- To arms! to arms! the fierce virago cries,
And swift as lightning to the combat flies. Pope.
2. It is commonly used in detestation for an impudent turbulent woman.
VIR'ELAY, n. f. [viirelay, viirelai, Fr.] A sort of little ancient French poem, that consisted only of two rhymes and short verses, with strops. L'Acad.
The mournful music in mirth now lift ne mask,
As she was wont in youth and summer days;
But if thou algate lust like viirelays,
And looser songs of love to underlong,
The band of flutes began to play, Spenser.
To which a lady sung a viirelay:
And still at ev'ry close she would repeat
The burden of the song, the daisy is so sweet. Dryden.- VIRENT, adj. [virens, Lat.] Green; not faded.
In these, yet fresh and virent, they carve out the figures of men and women. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
- VIRGE, n. f. [virga, Lat. better verge, from verge, French.]
A dean's mace.
Suppose him now a dean compleat,
Devoutly lolling in his seat;
The silver virge, with decent pride,
Stuck underneath his cushion side. Swift.
- VIRGIN, n. f. [virgo, Fr. virgo, Lat.]
1. A maid; a woman unacquainted with men.
This aspect of mine hath fear'd the valiant;
The best regarded virgins of our clime
Have lov'd it too. Shakefp.
Senseless bauble!
Art thou a fadary for this act, and look't
So virgin-like without? Shakefp. Cymbeline.
The damsel was very fair, and a virgin. Gen. xxiv. 16.
Angelo is an adulterous thief,
An hypocrite, a virgin violator. Shakefp.
Much less can that have any place,
At which a virgin hides her face. Cowley.
- 2. A woman not a mother. Unusual.
Likely to Ceres in her prime,
Yet virgin of Proserpina from Jove. Milton.
- 3. Any thing untouched or unmingled.
Tapers of white wax, commonly called virgin wax, burn with less smoke than common yellow wax. Boyle.
I have found virgin earth in the peat-marshes of Cheshire. Woodward.
Below the upper was a deep bed of sand only, which I weighed, together with the virgin-mould. Derham.
- 4. The sign of the zodiack in which the sun is in August.
Thence down again by Leo and the Virgin. Milton.
- VIRGIN, adj. Besitting a virgin; suitable to a virgin; maidenly.
Can you blame her then, being a maid, yet robed over with the virgin crimson of modesty, if she deny the appearance of a naked blind boy. Shakefp. Hen. V.
What says the silver with her virgin hue?
With ease a brother o'ercame Shakefp.
The formal decencies of virgin-shame. Cowley.
- To VIRGIN, v. n. [a cant word.] To play the virgin.
A kiss
Long as my exile, sweet as my revenge!
I carried from thee, my dear; and my true lip Hath virgin'd it e'er since. Shakefp. Coriolanus.
- VIRGINAL, adj. [from virgin.] Maiden; maidenly; pertaining to a virgin.
On the earth more fair was never seen,
Of chastity and honour virginal. Fairy Queen.
Tears virginal
Shall be to me even as the dew to fire;
And beauty, that the tyrant oft reclaims,
Shall to my flaming wrath be oil and flax. Shakefp.
Purity is a special part of this superstructure, restraining of all desires of the flesh within the known limits of conjugal or virginal chastity. Hammond's Fundamentals.
- To VIRGINAL, v. n. To pat; to strike as on the virginal.
A cant word.
Still *virginal*ling upon thy palm. Shakefp.
- VIRGINAL, n. f. [more usually virginals.] A musical instrument so called, because commonly used by young ladies.
The musician hath produced two means of straining strings.
The one is stopping them with the finger, as in the necks of lutes and viols; the other is the shortness of the string, as in harps and virginals. Bacon.
- VIRGINITY, n. f. [virginitas, Lat.] Maidenhead; unacquaintance with man.
You do impeach your modesty too much,
To trust the opportunity of night,
And the ill counsel of a desert place,
With the rich worth of your virginity. Shakefp.
Natural virginity of itself is not a state more acceptable to God; but that which is chosen in order to the conveniences of religion, and separation from worldly incumbrances. Taylor.
- VIRILE, n. f. [virilis, Lat.] Belonging to man; not puerile;
not feminine. VIRILITY.

VIR

- VIRILITY, n. f. [virilitas, Fr. virilitas, Lat. from virile.]
1. Manhood; character of man.
The lady made generous advances to the borders of virility. Rambler.- 2. Power of procreation.
The great climacterical was past, before they begat children, or gave any testimony of their virility; for none begat children before the age of sixty-five. Brown.
- VIRMI'LION, n. f. Properly vermilion. A red colour.
Egle, the fairest Nais of the flood, Rescommon.
With a vermilion dye his temples stain'd.
VIR'TUAL, adj. [virtuel, Fr. from virtue.] Having the efficacy without the sensible or material part.
Metalline waters have virtual cold in them. Put therefore wood into smith's water, and try whether it will not harden. Bacon.
Heat and cold have a virtual transition, without communication of substance. Bacon.
Love not the heav'nly spirits? And how their love Express they? by looks only? or, do they mix Irradiance? virtual, or immediate touch? Milton.
Every kind that lives,
Fomented by his virtual pow'r, and warm'd. Milton.
Neither an actual or virtual intention of the mind, but only that which may be gathered from the outward acts. Stillingsfleet.
- VIR'TUALITY, n. f. [from virtual.] Efficacy.
In one grain of corn there lieth dormant a virtuality of many other, and from thence sometimes proceed an hundred ears. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
- VIR'TUALLY, adv. [from virtual.] In effect, though not formally.
They are virtually contained in other words still continued. Hammond's Fundamentals.
Such is our constitution, that the bulk of the people vir- tually give their approbation to every thing they are bound to obey. Addison.
- To VIR'TUATE, v. a. [from virtus.] To make efficacious.
Potable gold should be endued with a capacity of being assimilated to the innate heat, and radical moisture; or at least virtuated with a power of generating the said essentials. Harvey.
- VIR'TUE, n. f. [virtus, Lat.]
1. Moral goodness.
Either I'm mistaken, or there is virtue in that Falstaff. Shakefp.
If there's a power above us,
And that there is, all nature cries aloud
Through all her works, he must delight in virtue,
And that which he delights in must be happy. Addison.
Virtue only makes our bliss below.
The character of prince Henry is improved by Shakefp.
and through the veil of his vices and irregularities, we see a dawn of greatness and virtue. Shakefp. illustrated.
- 2. A particular moral excellence.
In Belmont is a lady,
And she is fair, and fairer than that word,
Of wondrous virtues. Shakefp. Merchant of Venice.
Remember all his virtues,
And shew mankind that goodness is your care. Addison.
- 3. Medicinal quality.
All blest secrets,
All you unpublish'd virtues of the earth,
Be aidant and remediate. Shakefp. K. Lear.
The virtuous bezoar is taken from the beast that feedeth upon the mountains; and that without virtue from those that feed in the valleys. Bacon.
- 4. Medicinal efficacy.
An essay writer must practise the chymical method, and give the virtue of a full draught in a few drops. Addison.
- 5. Efficacy; power.
If neither words, nor herbs will do, I'll try stones; for there's a virtue in them. L'Estrange.
Where there is a full purpose to please God, there, what a man can do, shall, by virtue thereof, be accepted. South.
They are not sure, by virtue of syllogism, that the conclusion certainly follows from the premises. Locke.
This they shall attain, partly in virtue of the promise made by God; and partly in virtue of piety. Asterbury.
He used to travel through Greece, by virtue of this fable, which procured him reception in all the towns. Addison.
- 6. Acting power.
Jesus knowing that virtue had gone out of him, turned him about. Mark v. 30.
She moves the body, which the doth possels;
Yet no part toucheth, but by virtue's touch. Davies.
- 8. Bravery; valour.
Trust to thy single virtue; for thy soldiers Took their discharge. Shakefp. K. Lear.
The conquest of Palestine, with singular virtue they performed, and held that kingdom some few generations. Raleigh.
- 9. Excellence; that which gives excellence.
In the Greek poets, as also in Plautus, the oeconomy of poems is better observed than in Terence; who thought the

VIR

- sole grace and virtue of their fable, the sticking in of sentences, as ours do the forcing in of jests. B. Johnson.
10. One of the orders of the celestial hierarchy.
Thrones, domination, principdoms, virtues, pow'rs. Milt.
A winged virtue through th' etherial sky,
From orb to orb unwearied dost thou fly. Tickell.
 - VIR'TUELESS, adj. [from virtue.]
1. Wanting virtue; deprived of virtue.
2. Not having efficacy; without operating qualities.
All second causes, together with nature herself, without that operative faculty which God gave them, would become altogether silent, virtueless, and dead. Raleigh.
Virtueless the wilt all herbs and charms,
Wherewith false men increase their patients harms. Fairfax.
Some would make those glorious creatures virtueless. Hakewill.
 - VIR'TUOSO, n. f. [Italian.] A man skilled in antique or natural curiosities; a man studious of painting, statuary, or architecture.
Methinks those generous virtuosi dwell in a higher region than other mortals. Glanville.
Virtuosi, the Italians call a man who loves the noble arts, and is a critick in them. And amongst our French painters, the word virtuous is understood in the same signification. Dryd.
This building was beheld with admiration by the virtuosi of that time. Tatler, N^o. 52.
Showers of rain are now met with in every water-work;
and the virtuosi of France covered a little vault with artificial snow. Addison.
 - VIR'TUOUS, adj. [from virtue.]
1. Morally good.
If his occasion were not virtuous,
I should not urge it half so faithfully. Shakefp. Cæsar.
Virtuous and holy, be thou conqueror. Shakefp. Cæsar.
What she wills to do or say,
Is wisest, virtuous, discreetest, best. Milton.
Favour'd of heav'n, who finds
One virtuous rarely found,
That in domestic good combines:
Happy that house! his way to peace is smooth. Milton.
 2. [Applied to women.] Chaste.
Mistress Ford, the modest wife, the virtuous creature, that hath the jealous fool to her husband! Shakefp.
 3. Done in consequence of moral goodness.
Nor love is always of a vicious kind,
But oft to virtuous acts inflames the mind. Dryden.
 4. Efficacious; powerful.
With one virtuous touch, th' arch-chemic sun,
Produces, with terrestrial humour mix'd,
Here in the dark, so many precious things. Milton.
 5. Having wonderful or eminent properties.
Out of his hand,
That virtuous steel he rudely snatch'd away. Fairy Queen.
Lifting up his virtuous staff on high,
He smote the sea, which calmed was with speed. Spenser.
He own'd that virtuous ring and glass. Milton.
 6. Having medicinal qualities.
Some observe that there is a virtuous bezoar, and another without virtue; the virtuous is taken from the beast that feedeth where there are theriacal herbs; and that without virtue, from those that feed where no such herbs are. Bacon.
The ladies fought around
For virtuous herbs, which, gather'd from the ground,
They squeez'd the juice; and cooling ointment made. Dryd.
 - VIR'TUOUSLY, adv. [from virtuous.] In a virtuous manner;
according to the rules of virtue.
The Gods are my witnesses, I desire to do virtuously. Sidney.
In sum, they taught the world no less virtuously how to die, than they had done before how to live. Hooker.
They that mean virtuously, and yet do so,
The devil their virtue tempts not, they tempt heav'n. Shak.
Not from grey hairs authority doth flow,
Nor from bald heads, nor from a wrinkled brow;
But our past life, when virtuously spent,
Must to our age those happy fruits present. Denham.
The coffee-man has a little daughter four years old, who has been virtuously educated. Addison.
 - VIR'TUOUSNESS, n. f. [from virtuous.] The state or character of being virtuous.
Many other adventures are intermeddled; as the love of Britomert, and virtuousness of Belphebe; and the lasciviousness of Helenora. Spenser.
 - VIRULENCE, n. f. [from virulent.] Mental poison; malig-VIRULENCY, n. f. nity; acrimony of temper; bitterness.
Disputes in religion are managed with virulence and bitterness. Decay of Piety.
It infills into their minds the utmost virulence, instead of that charity which is the perfection and ornament of religion. Addison.
The whigs might easily have maintained a majority among the clergy, if they had not too much encouraged this intemperance of speech, and virulence of pen, in the most profitable of their party. Swift.

VIS

VI'RU'LENT. adj. [virulent, Fr. virulentus, Lat.]

1. Poisonous; venomous.
2. Poisoned in the mind; bitter; malignant.

VI'RU'LENTLY. adv. [from virulent.] Malignantly; with bitterness.

VI'SAGE. n. f. [visage, Fr. visaggio, Italian.] Face; countenance; look. It is now rarely used but with some ideas of dislike or horror.

Phoebe doth behold
Her silver visage in the watry glafs,
Decking with liquid pearl the bladed grafs. Shakesp.
When she shall hear this of thee, with her nails She'll flea thy wolfish visage. Shakesp. K. Lear.

Whereto serves mercy,
But to confront the visage of offence. Shakesp. Hamlet.
With hostile frown,
And visage all inflam'd, first thus began. Milton.

By the rout, that made the hideous roar,
His goary visage down the stream was sent;
Down the swift Hebrus to the Lesbian shore. Milton.
Love and beauty still that visage grace;
Death cannot fright 'em from their wonted place. Waller.

To VI'SCERATE. v. a. [viscera, Latin.] To embowel; to exentrate.

VI'SCID. adj. [viscidus, Latin.] Glutinous; tenacious.

VI'SCIDITY. n. f. [from viscid.] Glutinous; tenacious.

1. Glutinousness; tenacity; ropiness.

This motion in some human creatures may be weak, in respect to the viscid of what is taken, so as not to be able to propel it. Arbutnot.

2. Glutinous concretion.

Catharticks of mercurials precipitate the viscidities by their styplicity. Floyer.

VI'SCITY. n. f. [viscity, Fr. from viscos.]

1. Glutinousness; tenacity.

The air being mixed with the animal fluids, determines their condition as to rarity, density, viscity, tenuity. Arbutnot.

2. A glutinous substance.

A tenuous emanation, or continued effluvia, after some distance, retracteth unto itself, as is observable in drops of syrops, and seminal viscity. Brown's Vulg. Errors.

VI'SCOUNT. n. f. [viscomes, Latin.]

Viscount signifies as much as sheriff; between which two words there is no other difference, but that the one comes from our conquerors the Normans, and the other from our ancestors the Saxons. Viscount also signifies a degree of nobility next to an earl, which is an old name of office, but a new one of dignity, never heard of amongst us, till Henry VI. his days. Cowel.

VI'SCOUNTESS. n. f. [from viscount.] Viscount and viscountess are pronounced viscount and viscountess.] The lady of a viscount; a peeress of the fourth order.

VI'SCOUS. adj. [visqueux, Fr. viscosus, Lat.] Glutinous; sticky; tenacious.

The cause of the scouring virtue of nitre is, that it hath a subtle spirit, which severeth and divideth any thing that is foul and viscos. Bacon.

Holly is of so viscos a juice as they make bird-lime of the bark. Bacon.

VI'SIBILITY. n. f. [visibilit, Fr. from visibilis.]

1. The state or quality of being perceptible by the eye.

The colours of outward objects brought into a darkened room, do much depend for their visibility, upon the dimness of the light they are beheld by. Boyle.

2. State of being apparent, or openly discoverable; conspicuousness.

They produced this as an instance against the perpetual visibility of the church, and he brings it to prove that it ceased to be a true church. Stillingfleet.

In these, the visibility and example of our virtues will chiefly consist. Rogers's Sermons.

VI'SIBLE. n. f. [visibilis, Fr. visibilis, Lat.]

1. Perceptible by the eye.

Visibles work upon a looking-glass, which is like the pupil of the eye; and audibles upon the places of echo, which resemble the cavern of the ear. Bacon.

On this mount he appeared; under this tree Stood visible;
Here with him at this fountain talk'd. Milton.

Each thought was visible, that roll'd within,
As through a crystal case the figur'd hours are seen. Dryden.

A long series of ancestors thews the native lustre with great advantage; but if he degenerate from his line, the least spot is visible on ermine. Dryden.

2. Discerned to the eye.

If that the heavens do not their visible spirits
Send quickly down to tame the vile offences,
Humanity must perforce prey on itself,
Like monsters of the deep. Shakesp. K. Lear.

3. Apparent; open; conspicuous.

The factions at court were greater, or more visible than before. Clarendon.

VIS

VI'SIBLENESS. n. f. [from visibilis.] State or quality of being visible.

VI'SIBLY. adv. [from visibilis.] In a manner perceptible by the eye.

The day being visibly governed by the sun, is a little longer than the revolution of the equator; so much as is occasioned by the advance of the sun in his annual contrary motion along the ecliptick. Holder.

By the head we make known more visibly our supplications, our threatnings; enough to see the face, and to understand the mind at half a word. Dryden.

VI'SION. n. f. [visio, Fr. visio, Latin.]

1. Sight; the faculty of seeing.

Anatomists, when they have taken off from the bottom of the eye that outward and most thick coat called the dura mater, can then see through the thinner coats, the pictures of objects lively painted thereon. And these pictures, propagated by motion along the fibres of the optic nerves into the brain, are the cause of vision. Newton's Opticks.

These theorems being admitted into optics, there would be scope enough of handling that science voluminously, after a new manner; not only by teaching those things which tend to the perfection of vision, but also by determining mathematically all kinds of phenomena of colours which could be produced by refractions. Newton's Opticks.

2. The act of seeing.

Vision in the next life is the perfecting of faith in this;
or faith here is turned into vision there, as hope into enjoying. Hammond's Pract. Catechism.

3. A supernatural appearance; a spectre; a phantom.

The day seems long, but night is odious;
No sleep, but dreams; no dreams, but visions strange. Sidney.

Last night the very gods shew'd me a vision. Shakesp.
God's mother deigned to appear to me;
And, in a vision, full of majesty,
Will'd me to leave my base vocation. Shakesp. Hen. VI.

To call by vision, from his father's house,
Into a land which he will shew him. Milton's Par. Lost.

4. A dream; something shewn in a dream. A dream happens to a sleeping; a vision may happen to a waking man. A dream is supposed natural, a vision miraculous; but they are confounded.

His dream returns; his friend appears again:
The murderers come; now help, or I am slain!
'Twas but a vision still, and visions are but vain. Dryden.

The idea of any thing in our mind, no more proves the existence of that thing, than the visions of a dream make a true history. Locke.

VI'SIONARY. adj. [visionnaire, Fr. from visio.]

1. Affected by phantoms; disposed to receive impressions on the imagination.

No more these scenes my meditation aid,
Or lull to rest the visionary maid. Pope's Eloisa to Alford.

2. Imaginary; not real; seen in a dream; perceived by the imagination only.

The hounds at nearer distance hoarsely bray'd;
The hunter close pursu'd the visionary maid. Dryden.

If you have any skill in dreams, let me know whether I have the same place in the real heart, that I had in the visionary one. Addison.

Our victories only led us to further visionary prospects;
advantage was taken of the sanguine temper which success had wrought the nation up to. Swift.

VI'SIONARY. n. f. [visionnaire, Fr.] One whose imagination is disturbed.

The lovely visionary gave him perpetual uneasiness. Fem. Quix.

To VI'SIT. v. a. [visiter, Fr. visite, Lat.]

1. To go to see.

You must go visit the lady that lies in. — I visit her with my prayers; but I cannot go thither. Shakesp. Coriolanus.

Virgins visited by angel powers. Pope.

2. [In scriptural language.] To send good or evil judicially.

When God visiteth, what shall I answer him? Job xxxi. 14.
Thou shalt be visited of the Lord with thunder. Isa. xxix. 6.

When I visit, I will visit thee in upon them. Ex. xxxii. 34.
God visit thee in good things. Judith xiii. 20.

That venerable body is in little concern after what manner their mortal enemies intend to treat them, whenever God shall visit us with so fatal an event. Swift.

3. To salute with a present.

To come to a survey, with judicial authority.

The bishop ought to visit his diocese every year in person.

To VI'SIT. v. n. To keep up the intercourse of ceremonial salutations at the houses of each other.

VI'SIT. n. f. [visite, Fr. from the verb.] The act of going to see another.

In a designed or accidental visit, let some one take a book, which may be agreeable, and read in it. Watts.

VI-SIT.

VIS

VI'SITABLE. adj. [from visit.] Liable to be visited.

All hospitals built since the reformation, are visitabile by the king or lord chancellor. Ayliffe's Paragon.

VI'SITANT. n. f. [from visit.] One who goes to see another.

He alone
To find where Adam shelter'd, took his way,
Not unperceiv'd of Adam, who to Eve,
While the great visitant approach'd, thus spake. Milton.

One visit begins an acquaintance; and when the visitant comes again, he is no more a stranger. South.

Edward the first, who had been a visitant in Spain, upon action in the holy land, fixed both our pounds by the measures of the East. Arbutnot on Coins.

Griev'd that a visitant so long shou'd wait
Unmark'd, unhonour'd, at a monarch's gate, Instant he flew. Pope's Odyssey. b. i. l. 160.

VI'SITATION. n. f. [visito, Latin.]

1. The act of visiting.

He comes not
Like to his father's greatness; his approach,
So out of circumstance and sudden, tells us,
'Tis not a visitation fram'd, but forc'd. Shakesp. Winter Tale.

By need and accident.
What would you with the prince's? — — Nothing but peace and gentle visitation. Shakespeare.

2. Object of visits.

O slow'rs,
My early visitation, and my last. Milton's Par. Lost.

3. [Visitation, Fr.] Judicial visit or perambulation.

The bishop ought to visit his diocese every year in person, unless he omits the same because he would not burthen his churches; and then ought to send his arch-deacon, which was the original of the arch-deacon's visitation. Ayliffe.

4. Judicial visit by God; state of suffering judicial evil.

That which thou dost not understand when thou readest, thou shalt understand in the day of thy visitation. For many secrets of religion are not perceived till they be felt, and are not felt but in the day of a great calamity. Taylor.

5. Communication of divine love.

The most comfortable visitations God hath sent men from above, have taken especially the times of prayer as their most natural opportunities. Hooker.

VI'SITATORIAL. adj. [from visitor.] Belonging to a judicial visitor.

Some will have it, that an archdeacon does of common right execute this visitatorial power in his archdeaconry; but others say that an archdeacon has a visitatorial power only of common right per medium simplicis scrutini, as being bishop's vicar. Ayliffe's Paragon.

VI'SITER. n. f. [from visit.]

1. One who comes to see another.

Here's ado to look up honestly and honour from the access of gentle visitors. Shakespeare.

You see this confluence, this great flood of visitors. Shakesp.
Consumptives of this degree entertain their visitors with strange rambling discourses of their intent of going here and there. Harvey.

I have a large house, yet I should hardly prevail to find one visitor, if I were not able to hire him with a bottle of wine. Swift to Gay.

2. [Visiteur, Fr.] An occasional judge; one who regulates the disorders of any society.

The visitors expell'd the orthodox; they, without scruple or shame, possess'd themselves of their colleges. Walton.

To him you must your sickly state refer;
Your charter claims him as your visitor. Garrh.

Whatever abuses have crept into the universities, might be reformed by strict injunctions to the visitors and heads of houses. Swift's Project for the Advancement of Religion.

VI'SNOMY. n. f. [from visio.] Face; countenance. Not in use.

Twelve gods do sit around in royal state,
And Jove in midst with awful majesty,
To judge the strife between them flur'd late:
Each of the gods by his like visnomy
Eath to be known, but Jove above them all,
By his great looks and pow'r imperial. Spenser.

VI'SIVE. adj. [visiv, Fr. visus, Lat.] Formed in the act of seeing.

This happens when the axis of the visive cones, diffused from the object, fall not upon the same plane; but that which is conveyed into one eye is more depressed or elevated than that which enters the other. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

VI'SOR. n. f. [This word is variously written visard, visar, visor, visard, visor. I prefer visor, as nearest the Latin visus, and concurring with visage, a kindred word; visore,
French.] A mask used to disguise and disguise.

I fear, indeed, the weakness of my government before, made you think such a mask would be grateful unto me;
and my weaker government since, makes you pull off the visor. Sidney.

VIT

This loutish clown is such that you never saw so ill-favoured a visor; his behaviour such, that he is beyond the degree of ridiculous. Sidney.

By which deceit doth mask in visor fair,
And cast her colours dyed deep in grain,
To seem like truth, whose shape she well can fain. Spenser.

But that thy face is, visor-like, unchanging,
Made impudent with use of evil deeds,
I wou'd essay, proud queen, to make thee blush. Shakesp.

One visor remains,
And that is Claudio; I know him by his bearing. Shakesp.

The Cyclops, a people of Sicily, remarkable for cruelty, might, perhaps, in their wars use a head-piece, or visor. Brown's Odyssey Notes.

VI'SORED. v. n. [from visor.] Masked.

Hence with thy brew'd enchantments, foul deceiver!
Hast thou betray'd my credulous innocence
With visor'd falsehood, and base forgery. Milton.

VI'STAD. n. f. [Italian.] View; prospect through an avenue.

In St. Peter's, when a man stands under the dome, if he looks upwards, he is astonished at the spacious hollow of the cupola, that makes one of the beautifullest vistas that the eye can pass through. Addison's Remarks on Italy.

The fifth'd garden to the view
Its vista's opens, and its alleys green. Thomson's Spring.

VI'SUAL. adj. [visuel, French.] Used in sight; exercising the power of sight; instrumental to sight.

An eye thrust forth so as it hangs a pretty distance by the visual nerve, hath been without any power of sight; and yet, after being replaced, recovered sight. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

The air,
No where so clear, sharpen'd his visual ray
To objects distant far. Milton's Par. Lost.

Then purg'd with euphrasy and rue
The visual nerve; for he had much to see. Milton.

Inward lights, alas,
Puts forth no visual beam! Milton's Agonistes.

VIT'AL. adj. [vitalis, Latin.]

1. Contributing to life; necessary to life.

His heart, broken with unkindness and affliction, stretched so far beyond his limits with this excess of comfort, as it was able no longer to keep fast his vital spirits. Sidney.

All nature laughs, the groves are fresh and fair;
The sun's mild lustre warms the vital air. Pope.

2. Relating to life.

Let not Bardolph's vital thread be cut
With edge of penny cord, and vile reproach. Shakespeare.

On the rock a scanty measure place
Of vital flax, and turn the wheel a-pace. Dryden.

3. Containing life.

Spirits that live throughout;
Vital in every part; not as frail man,
In intrails, heart, or head, liver, or reins, Cannot but by annihilating die. Milton's Par. Lost.

On the watry calm,
His brooding wings the spirit of God outspreads;
And vital virtue infus'd, and vital warmth Throughout the fluid mafs. Milton's Par. Lost.

4. Being the seat of life.

The dart flew on, and pierc'd a vital part. Pope.

5. So disposed as to live. Little used, and rather Latin than English.

Pythagoras and Hippocrates not only affirm the birth of the seventh month to be vital, that of the eighth mortal; but the progression thereto to be measured by rule. Brown.

6. Essential; chiefly necessary.

Know grief's vital part Consists in nature, not in art. Bp. Corbet.

VIT'ALITY. n. f. [from vital.] Power of subsisting in life.

Whether that motion, vitality and operation were by incubation, or how else, the manner is only known to God. Raleigh's Hist. of the World.

For the security of species produced only by seed, providence hath endued all seed with a lasting vitality, that if by any accident it happen not to germinate the first year, it will continue its fecundity twenty or thirty years. Roy.

VIT'ALLY. adv. [from vital.] In such a manner as to give life.

The organical structure of human bodies, whereby they are fitted to live and move, and be vitally informed by the soul, is the workmanship of a most wise, powerful, and beneficent maker. Bentley.

VI'TALS. n. f. [Without the singular.] Parts essential to life.

By fits my swelling grief appears,<

VIT

A greater difficulty in the doctrine of eggs is, how the sperm of the cock attaineth into every egg; since the vitellary, or place of the yolk, is very high. Brown's Vulg. Errors.
TO VITIATE. v. a. [vitio, Latin.] To deprave; to spoil; to make less pure.
 The sun in his garden gives him the purity of visible objects, and of true nature, before the was vitiated by luxury. Evelyn's Kalend.
 The organs of speech are managed by so many muscles, that speech is not easily destroyed, though often somewhat vitiated as to some particular letters. Holder.
 Spirits encountering foul bodies, and exciting a fermentation of those vitiated humours, precipitate into putrid fevers. Harvey.
 This undistinguishing complaisance will vitiate the taste of the readers, and misguide many of them in their judgments, where to approve and where to censure. Garth.
 A transposition of the order of the sacramental words, in some men's opinion, vitiates baptism. Ayliffe's Parergon.
VITIATION. n. f. [from vitiate.] Depravation; corruption.
 The foreaid extenuation of the body is imputed to the blood's vitiation by malign, putrid vapours smoking throughout the vessels. Harvey on Consumptions.
TO VITILIGATE. v. n. [vitio, Latin.] To vitiate; to stain; to discolour.
VITILIGATION. n. f. [from vitiligate.] Contention; cavillation.
 I'll force you by right ratiocination,
 To leave your vitiligation. Hudibras.
VITIOL. n. f. [from vitio, Latin.] Depravity; corruption.
 He charges it wholly upon the corruption, perverseness, and vitiosity of man's will, as the only cause that rendered all the arguments his doctrine came clothed with, unsuccessful. South's Sermons.
VITIOUS. adj. [vitiosus, Fr. vitiosus, Latin.]
 1. Corrupt; wicked; opposite to virtuous. It is rather applied to habitual faults, than criminal actions.
 Make known
 It is no virtuous blot, murder, or foulness
 That hath depriv'd me of your grace. Shakespeare. K. Lear.
 Witless th' irreverent son
 Of him who built the ark; who, for the shame Done to his father, heard his heavy curse,
 ' Servant of servants,' on his virtuous race. Milton.
 Wit's what the virtuous fear, the virtuous shun;
 By fools 'tis hated, and by knaves undone. Pope.
 No troops abroad are so ill disciplin'd as the English;
 which cannot well be otherwise, while the common soldiers have before their eyes the virtuous example of their leaders. Swift.
 2. Corrupt; having physical ill qualities.
 When virtuous language contends to be high, it is full of rock, mountain, and pointedness. B. Johnson.
 Here from the virtuous air and sickly skies,
 A plague did on the dumb creation rise. Dryden.
VITIOUSLY. adv. [from vitious.] Not virtuously; corruptly.
VITIQUOUS. n. f. [from vitiosus.] Corruptness; state of being vitious.
 When we in our vitiousness grow hard,
 The wife gods feel our eyes. Shakespeare.
 What makes a governor justly despised is vitiousness and ill morals. Virtue must tip the preacher's tongue, and the ruler's scepter with authority. South.
VITREOUS. adj. [vitreus, Fr. vitreus, Latin.] Glassy; consisting of glass; resembling glass.
 The hole answers to the pupil of the eye; the crystalline humour to the lenticular glass; the dark room to the cavity containing the vitreous humour, and the white paper to the retina. Ray on the Creation.
 When the phlegm is too viscous, or separates into too great a quantity, it brings the blood into a morbid state: this viscous phlegm seems to be the vitreous petuete of the an-tients. Arbuthnot on Aliments.
VITREOUSNESS. n. f. [from vitreous.] Resemblance of glass.
VITRIFICABLE. adj. [from vitrificate.] Convertible into glass.
TO VITRIFICATE. v. a. [vitrum and facio, Lat.] To change into glass.
 We have metals vitrified, and other materials, besides those of which you make glass. Bacon.
VITRIFICATION. n. f. [from vitrification, Fr. from vitrificate.] Production of glass; act of changing, or state of being changed into glass.
 For vitrification likewise, what metals will endure it? Also, because vitrification is accounted a kind of death of metals, what vitrification will admit of turning back again, and what not? Bacon's Physical Remarks.
 If the heat be more fierce, it maketh the grosser part itself run and melt; as in the making of ordinary glass; and in the vitrification of earth in the inner parts of furnaces; and in the vitrification of brick and metals. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
 Upon the knowledge of the different ways of making minerals and metals capable of vitrification, depends the art of making counterfeit or fictitious gems. Boyle on Colours.

VIV

TO VITRIFY. v. a. [vitrifier, Fr. vitrum and facio, Lat.] To change into glass.
 Metals will vitrify; and perhaps some portion of the glass of metal vitrified, mixed in the pot of ordinary glass metal, will make the whole mass more tough. Bacon.
 Iron-slag, vitrified, has in it cortices encompassing one another, like those in agates. Woodward.
TO VITRIFY. v. n. To become glass; to be changed into glass.
 Chymists make vessels of animal substances calcined, which will not vitrify in the fire; for all earth which hath any salt or oil in it, will turn to glass. Arbuthnot on Aliments.
VITRIOL. n. f. [vitriol, Fr. vitriolum, Lat.]
 Vitriol is produced by addition of a metallick matter with the fossil acid salt.
 I rubbed it with the vitriol-stone. Woodward.
VITRIOLATE. adj. [vitriolatus, Fr. from vitriolum, Lat.] Impregnated with vitriol; consisting of vitriol.
 Iron may be dissolved by any tart, salt, or vitriolated water. Bacon.
 The water having dissolved the imperfectly calcined body, the vitriolate corpuscles swimming in the liquor, by their occurrences constituted little masses of vitriol, which gave the water they impregnated a fair vitriolate colour. Boyle.
VITRIOLICK. adj. [vitriolique, Fr. from vitriolum, Lat.] Resembling vitriol; containing vitriol.
 Copper of Mars, by some called salt of steel, made by the spirits of vitriol or sulphur, will, after ablution, be attracted by the loadstone: and therefore whether those flooring salts partake but little of steel, and be not rather the vi-triolous spirits fixed unto salt by the effluvia or odour of steel, is not without good question. Brown's Vulg. Errors.
 These salts have somewhat of a nitrous taste, but mix'd with a smatch of a vitriolick. Crew's Museum.
 By over-fermentation, or long-keeping, wine becomes sharp as in hock, like the vitriolick acidity. Floyer.
VITULINE. adj. [vitulinus, Lat.] Belonging to a calf, or to veal. Bailey.
VITUPERABLE. adj. [vituperabilis, Lat.] Blame worthy. Ainsl.
TO VITUPERATE. v. a. [vituperer, Fr. vituperer, Latin.] To blame; to censure.
VITUPERATION. n. f. [vituperatio, Lat.] Blame; censure.
 Such a writing ought to be clean, and free from any cavil or vituperation of nature. Ayliffe's Parergon.
VIVACIOUS. adj. [vivax, Lat.]
 1. Long-lived.
 Though we should allow them their perpetual calm and equability of heat, they will never be able to prove, that therefore men would be so vivacious as they would have us believe. Bentley.
 2. Spritely; gay; active; lively.
VIVACIOUSNESS. n. f. [vivacitas, Fr. from vivacious.]
VIVACITY. n. f. [vivacitas, Fr. from vivacious.]
 1. Liveliness; spriteliness.
 They are esteemed very hot in operation, and will, in a convenient air, survive some days the loss of their heads and hearts; so vigorous is their vivacity. Boyle.
 He had a great vivacity in his countenance. Dryden.
 2. Longevity; length of life.
 Fables are rais'd concerning the vivacity of deer; for neither are their gestation nor increment such as may afford an argument of long life. Brown's Vulg. Errors.
VIVARY. n. f. [vivarium, Lat.] A warren. Ainsworth.
VIVE. adj. [vive, Fr. vivus, Latin.] Lively; forcible; presting.
 By a vive and forcible persuasion, he mov'd him to a war upon Flanders. Bacon.
VIVENCY. n. f. [vivus, Latin.] Manner of supporting or continuing life, or vegetation.
 Although not in a distinct and indisputable way of vivency, or answering in all points the property of plants, yet in inferior and descending constitutions, they are determined by feminilities. Brown's Vulg. Errors.
VIVES. n. f. A distemper among horses.
 Vives is much like the strangles; and the chief difference is, that for the most part the strangles happen to colts and young horses while they are at grass, by feeding with their heads downwards; by which means the swelling inclines more to the jaws; but the vives happens to horses at any age and time, and is more particularly seated in the glands and kernels under the ears. Farriers Dict.
VIVID. adj. [vividus, Latin.]
 1. Lively; quick; striking.
 The liquor, retaining its former vivid colour, was grown clear again. Boyle.
 To make these experiments the more manifest, such bodies ought to be chosen as have the fullest and most vivid colours, and two of those bodies compared together. Newton.
 Ah! what avail his golly varying dyes?
 The vivid green his shining plumes unfold.
 His painted wings, and breast that flames with gold. Pope.
 2. Spritely;

VIZ

2. Spritely; active.
 Body is a fit workhouse for sprightly, vivid faculties to excise and exert themselves in. South.
 Where the genius is bright, and the imagination vivid,
 the power of memory may lose its improvement. Watts.
VIVIDLY. adv. [from vivid.] With life; with quickness;
 with strength.
 In the moon we can with excellent telescopes discern many hills and vallies, whereof some are more, and some less vividly illustrated; and others have a fainter, others a deeper shade. Boyle on Colours.
 Sensitive objects affect a man, in the state of this present life, much more warmly and vividly than those which affect only his nobler part, his mind. South.
VIVIDNESS. n. f. [from vivid.] Life; vigour; quickness.
VIVIFIC. adj. [vivificus, Lat.] Giving life.
TO VIVIFICATE. v. a. [vivifico, Lat.]
 1. To make alive; to inform with life; to animate.
 2. To recover from such a change of form as seems to destroy the essential properties.
VIVIFICATION. n. f. [vivification, Fr. from vivifico.] The act of giving life.
 If that motion be in a certain order, there followeth vi-vification and figuration. Bacon.
VIVIFICK. adj. [vivifiquus, Fr. vivificus, Latin.] Giving life; making alive.
 Without the sun's salutary and vivifick beams, all motion would cease, and nothing be left but darkness and death. Ray.
TO VIVIFY. v. a. [vivifier, Fr. vivus and facio, Lat.] To make alive; to animate; to endue with life.
 It hath been observed by the antients, that there is a worm that breedeth in old snow, of a reddish colour, and dull of motion; which would shew, that snow hath in it a secret warmth, else it could hardly vivify. Bacon.
 Sitting on eggs doth vivify, not nourish. Bacon.
 Gut-worms, as soon as vivified, creep into the stomach for nutriment. Harvey on Consumptions.
VIVIPAROUS. adj. [vivus and pario, Lat.] Bringing the young alive; opposed to viviparous.
 When we perceive that bats have teats, it is not unreasonable to infer, they give suck; but whereas no other flying animals have these parts, we cannot from them infer a viviparous exclusion. Brown's Vulg. Errors.
 Their species might continue, though they had been viviparous; yet it would have brought their individuals to very small numbers. More's Antidote against Atheism.
 If birds had been viviparous, the burthen of their womb had been so great and heavy, that their wings would have failed them. Ray on the Creation.
VIXEN. n. f.
 Vixen or fixen is the name of a she-fox; otherwise applied to a woman whose nature and condition is thereby compared to a fox. Verstegan.
 O! when she's angry, she's keen and shrewd;
 She was a vixen, when she went to school;
 And though she be but little, she is fierce. Shakespeare.
 See a pack of spaniels, called lovers, in a hot pursuit of a two-legged vixen, who only flies the whole loud pack, to be singled out by one. Wycherly.
VIZ. n. f. [This word is videlicet, written with a contraction.]
 To wit; that is. A barbarous form of an unnecessary word.
 That which I oft by sundry writers
 Has been apply'd t'almost all fighters,
 More justly may b' ascrib'd to this,
 Than any other warrior, viz.
 None ever acted both parts bolder,
 Both of a chieftain and a soldier. Hudibras.
 The chief of all signs which the Almighty endued man with,
 is humane voice, and the several modifications thereof by the organs of speech, viz. the letters of the alphabet, form'd by the several motions of the mouth. Holder.
 Let this be done relatively, viz. one thing greater or stronger, casting the rest behind, and rendering it less sensible by its opposition. Dryden's Dyrresnay.
VIZARD. n. f. [visiere, Fr. See VISOR.] A mask used for disguise.
 Let the suits of the maskers be graceful, and such as become the person when the vizards are off. Bacon.
 Brought vizards in a civil disguise. Roscommon.
 A lye is like a vizard, that may cover the face indeed,
 but can never become it. South.
 Ye shall know them by their fruits, not by their well or ill living; for they put on the vizard of seeming sanctity. Atterb.
 He mistook it for a very whimsical sort of mask, but upon a nearer view he found, that she held her vizard in her hand. Addison.
TO VIZARD. v. a. [from the noun.] To mask.
 Degree being vizarded,
 Th' unworthiest shews as fairly in the mask. Shakespeare.
VIZIER. n. f. [properly Vazir.] The prime minister of the Turkish empire.

UMB

He made him vizier, which is the chief of all the bafsa's. Knolles's Hist. of the Turks.
 This grand vizier presuming to invest
 The chief imperial city of the west;
 With the first charge compell'd in haste to rise,
 His treasure, tents and cannon left a prize. Waller.
ULCER. n. f. [ulcere, Fr. ulcus, Latin.] A fore of continuance; not a new wound.
 Thou answer't it, the is fair;
 Pour't in the open ulcer of my heart
 Her eyes, her hair, her cheek, her gait, her voice! Shakespe.
 My ulcers swell, Sandy's Paraphrase.
 Corrupt and smell. Milton.
 Intestine stone and ulcer, colick pangs.
 While he was dressing that opening, other abscesses were raised, and from the several apoplexations sinuous ulcers were made. Wiseman's Surgery.
TO ULCERATE. v. a. [ulcerer, Fr. ulcere, Latin.] To disease with fores.
 Some depend upon the intemperament of the part ulcerated;
 others upon the continual afflux of lacerative humours. Harvey.
 An acrid and purulent matter mixeth with the blood, in such as have their lungs ulcerated. Arbuthnot on Aliments.
ULCERATION. n. f. [ulceration, Fr. ulceratio, from ulcere, Lat.]
 1. The act of breaking into ulcers.
 2. Ulcer; fore.
 The effects of mercury on ulcerations are manifest. Arbuth.
ULCEROUS. adj. [ulcerosus, Latin.] Afflicted with fores.
 Strangely visited people,
 All swollen and ulcerous he cures. Shakespeare. Macbeth.
 An ulcerous disposition of the lungs, and an ulcer of the lungs, may be appositely termed causes of a pulmonique consumption. Harvey on Consumptions.
ULCEROUSNESS. n. f. [from ulcerous.] The state of being ul-cerous.
ULCERED. adj. [ulceré, Fr. from ulcer.] Grown by time from a hurt to an ulcer.
 Esculapius went about with a dog and a she-goat; the first for licking ulcered wounds, and the goat's milk for the diseases of the stomach. Temple.
ULGINOUS. adj. [uliginosus, Latin.] Slimy; muddy.
 The uliginous lacteous matter taken notice of in the coral fishings upon the coast of Italy, was only a collection of the coralline particles. Woodward.
ULTIMATE. adj. [ultimus, Latin.] Intended in the last resort; being the last in the train of consequences.
 I would be at the worst; worst is my port,
 My harbour, and my ultimate repose. Milton.
 Many actions apt to procure fame, are not conducive to this our ultimate happiness. Addison.
 The ultimate allotment of God to men, is really a consequence of their own voluntary choice, in doing good or evil. Rogers's Sermons.
ULTIMATELY. adv. [from ultimate.] In the last consequence.
 Charity is more extensive than either of the two other graces, which center ultimately in ourselves; for we believe, and we hope for our own sakes: but love, which is a more disinterested principle, carries us out of ourselves, into desires and endeavours of promoting the interests of other beings. Aterbury.
 Trust in our own powers, ultimately terminates in the friendship of other men, which their advantages assure to us. Rogers's Sermons.
ULTIMITY. n. f. [ultimus, Latin.] The last stage; the last consequence. A word very convenient, but not in use.
 Alteration of one body into another, from crudity to perfect concoction, is the ultimity of that process. Bacon.
ULTRAMARINE. n. f. [ultra and marinus, Latin.] One of the noblest blue colours used in paintings, produced by calcination from the stone called lapis lazuli. Hill.
 Others, notwithstanding they are brown, cease not to be soft and faint, as the blue of ultramarine. Dryden.

UMP

I'll put myself in poor and mean attire,
And with a kind of umber smirch my face. Shakespeare.
Umbre is very sensible and earthy; there is nothing but pure black which can dispute with it. Dryden.
The umbres, ochres, and minerals found in the fiftures, are much finer than those found in the strata. Woodward.
2. A fish. [thymallus, Lat.]
The umber and grayling differ as the herring and pilcher do: but though they may do so in other nations, those in England differ nothing but in their names. Walt. Angler.
UMBERED, adj. [from umber or umbra, Lat.] Shaded;
clouded.
From camp to camp, through the foul womb of night,
Fire answers fire; and through their paly flames
Each battle sees the other's umber'd face. Shakeſp. Hen V.
UMBRICAL, adj. [umbilical, Fr. from umbilicus, Lat.] Belonging to the navel.
Birds are nourished by umbilical vessels, and the navel is manifest a day or two after excretion. Brown's Vulg. Errors.
In a calf, the umbilical vessels terminate in certain bodies divided into a multitude of carnosous papillae, received into fo many sockets of the cotyledons growing on the womb. Ray.

Which fierceſt foes could break by no means. Swift.
UMBRAGE, n. f. [umbrage, Fr.]
1. Shade; ſhreen of trees;
O, might I here
In ſolitude live ſavage; in ſome glade
Obſcur'd, where hiſt'ring woods, impenetrable
To ſtar, or ſun-light, ſpread their umbrage broad,
And brown as evening! Milton's Par. Loſt.
Men ſwelling run
To grotts and caves, and the cool umbrage ſeek
Of woven arborets. Philips.
2. Shadow; appearance.
The reſt are umbrages quickly diſpell'd; the aſtrologer ſubjects liberty to the motions of heaven. Branſh. againſt Hobbs.
The opinion carries no ſhew of truth nor umbrage of reaſon of its ſide. Woodward.
Such a removal of the metal out of one part of the mals, and collecting of it in another, has miſt ſome, and given umbrage to an opinion, that there is a growth of metal in one expoſed to the air. Woodward on Feſſils.
3. Reſentment; offence; ſuſpicion of injury.
Although he went on with the war, yet it ſhould be but with his ſword in his hand, to bend the ſtiffneſs of the other party to accept of peace: and ſo the king ſhould take no umbrage of his arming and proſecution. Bacon.
UMBRA'GEOUS, adj. [umbrageus, Fr.] Shady; yielding ſhade.
Umbrageous grotts and caves of cool reſeſs. Milton.
Walk daily in a pleaſant, airy, and umbrageous garden. Harvey.

The learned Sennertus, in that book, takes not upon him to play the advocate for the chymists, but the umpire between them and the peripateticks. Bogle.
The vaſt diſtance that ſin had put between the offending creature and the offended Creator, required the help of ſome great umpire and interceſſor, to open him a new way of acceſs to God; and this Chriſt did for us as mediator. South.
The jealous ſects, that dare not truſt their cauſe
So far from their own will as from the laws,
You for their umpire and their ſynod take. Dryden.
UN, A Saxon privative or negative particle anſwering to in of the Latins, and α of the Greeks, on, Dutch. It is placed almost at will before adjectives and adverbs. All the in-ſtances of this kind of compoſition cannot therefore be inſerted; but I have collected a number ſufficient, perhaps more than ſufficient, to explain it.
UNABASHED, adj. [from abashed.] Not ſhamed; not confuſed by modeſty.
Earleſs on high, ſtood unabashed Deſoe,

Too like the light'ning, which doth ceaſe to be,
Ere one can ſay, it lightens. Shakeſp. Romeo and Juliet.
Theſe proſperous proceedings were turned back by the un- advise'd forwardneſs of divers chief counſellors, in making ſudden and unreaſonable alterations. Hayward.
Specifick conformities can be no unadvise'd productions;
but are regulated by the immediate efficiency of ſome knowing agent. Glauville.
UNADVIS'DLY, adv. Imprudently; raſhly; indiſcreetly.
A ſtrange kind of ſpeech unto chriſtian ears; and ſuch, as I hope they themſelves do acknowledge unadvise'dly uttered. Hooker.
What man's wit is there able to ſound the depth of thoſe dangerous and fearful evils, whereinto our weak and impotent nature is inclinable to ſink itſelf, rather than to ſhew an acknowledgment of error in that which once we have unadvise'dly taken upon us to defend, againſt the ſream of a contrary publick reſolution. Hooker.
What is done cannot be now amended;
Men ſhall deal unadvise'dly ſometimes,
Which after-hours give leiſure to repent of. Shakeſp.
A word unadvise'dly ſpoken on the one ſide, or miſunder-ſtood on the other, has rais'd ſuch an averſion to him, as in time has produced a perfect hatred of him. South.
UNADVISEDLY, adj. Genuine; not ſpoiled by ſpurious mixtures.
I have only diſcovered one of thoſe channels, by which the hiſtory of our Saviour might be conveyed pure and un-

To that strange stroke, which conquered all my senses;
Can thoughts still thinking to rest unappalled? Sidney.
Infernal ghosts
Environ'd thee; some howl'd, some yell'd, some shriek'd;
Some bent at thee their fiery darts; while thou Sat'st unappall'd in calm and sinless peace. Milton.
As a lion, unappall'd with fear,
Springs on the toils, and rushes on the spear. Dryden.
Does this appear like guilt? When thus serene,
With eyes erect, and visage unappall'd,
Fixt on that awful face, I stand the charge;
Amaz'd, not fearing. Smith's Phœd. and Hypolitus.

UNAPPA'RLLED. adj. Not dressed; not clothed.
In Peru, though they were an unap'arrell'd people, and had some customs very barbarous, yet the government of the Incas had many parts of civility. Bacon's Holy Wars.
Till our souls be unap'arrell'd
Of bodies, they from bliss are banished. Denn.

UNAPPA'RENT. adj. Obscure; not visible.
Thy potent voice he hears,
And longer will delay to hear thee tell
His generation, and the rising birth
Of nature, from the unapparent deep. Milton.

UNAPPEASABLE. adj. Not to be pacified; implacable.
The unappeasable rage of Hildebrand and his successors, never left persecuting him, by raising one rebellion upon another. Ruleigh's Essays.
I see thou art implacable; more deaf
To pray'rs than winds to seas; yet winds to seas
Are reconcil'd at length, and seas to shore.
Thy anger, unappeasable, still rages,
Eternal tempest never to be calm'd. Milton.

UNAPPEASED. adj. Not pacified.
Sacrifice his flesh,
That to the shadows be not unappeas'd. Shakespeare.
His son forgot, his empress unappeas'd;
How soon the tyrant with new love is seiz'd. Dryden.

UNA

UNAPPLICABLE. adj. [from apply.] Such as cannot be applied.
Gratitude, by being confined to the few, has a very narrow province to work on, being acknowledged to be unaplicable, and so consequently ineffectual to all others. Hammond.
Their beloved earl of Manchester appeared now as unaplicable to their purposes as the other. Carendon.
The singling out, and laying in order those intermediate ideas, that demonstratively shew the equality or inequality of unaplicable quantities, has produced discoveries. Locke.

UNAPPREHENDED. adj. Not understood.
They of whom God is altogether unapprehended, are but few in number, and for grossness of wit such, that they hardly seem to hold the place of human being. Hooker.

UNARMED. adj. [from unarm.] Having no armour; having no weapons.
On the western coast
Rideth a puissant navy: To our shores
Throng many doubtful, hollow-hearted friends,
Unarm'd, and unreluctant to beat them back. Shakespeare.
He all unarm'd
Shall chafe thee with the terror of his voice
From thy demoniac holds, possession foul;
Thence and thy legions, yelling they shall fly,
And beg to hide them in a herd of swine. Milton.
Though unarm'd I am,
Here, without my sword or pointed lance,
Hope not, base man, unquesti'd hence to go. Dryden.
Whereas most other creatures are furnished with weapons for their defence; man is born altogether unarmed. Grew.

UNARRAIGNED. adj. Not brought to a trial.

UNA

As lawful lord, and king by just descent,
Should here be judg'd, unheard, and unarraign'd. Daniel.

Unask'd, thou tak'st such pains to tell me only My son's the better man. Denham's Sophy.
The bearded corn ensu'd
From earth unask'd, nor was that earth renew'd. Dryden.
How, or why
Shou'd all conspire to cheat us with a lye?
Unask'd their pains, ungrateful their advice;
Starving their gain, and martyrdom their price. Dryden.

UNASPIRING. adj. Not ambitious.
To be modest and unaspiring, in honour preferring one another. Rogers.

UNASSAILED. adj. Not attacked; not assailed.
As I intend, Clifford, to thrive to-day,
It grieves my soul to leave thee unassail'd. Shakespeare.
I believe
That he, the supreme good, t' whom all things ill
Are but as slavish officers of vengeance,
Would send a glitt'ring guardian, if need were,
To keep my life and honour unassail'd. Milton's Comus.

UNASSAILABLE. adj. Exempt from assault.
In the number, I do but know one,
That unassailable holds on his rank,
Unshak'd of motion. Shakespeare. Julius Caesar.

UNASSAYED. adj. Unattempted.
What is faith, love, virtue unassay'd? Milton.

UNASSISTED. adj. Not helped.
Its victories were the victories of reason, unassisted by the force of human power, and as gentle as the triumphs of light over darkness. Addison's Freeholder.
What unassisted reason could not discover, that God has set clearly before us in the revelation of the gospel: a felicity equal to our most enlarged desires; a state of immortal and unchangeable glory. Rogers's Sermons.

UNASSISTING. adj. Giving no help.
With these I went, a brother of the war;
Nor idle stood, with unassisting hands,
When savage beasts, and men's more savage bands,
Their virtuous toil subdu'd: yet these I sway'd. Dryden.

UNASSUMING. adj. Not arrogant.
Unassuming worth in secret liv'd,
And died neglected. Thomson's Winter.

UNASSURED. adj.
1. Not confident.
The ensuing treatise, with a timorous and unassured countenance, adventures into your presence. Glanville.
2. Not to be trusted.
The doubts and dangers, the delays and woes;
The feigned friends, the unassured foes,
Do make a lover's life a wretch's hell. Spenser.

UNATTAINABLE. adj. Not to be gained or obtained; being out of reach.
Praise and prayer are God's due worship; which are unattainable by our discourse, simply considered, without the benefit of divine revelation. Dryden's Religio Laici.
I do not expect that men should be perfectly kept from error; that is more than human nature can, by any means, be advanced to: I aim at no such unattainable privilege; I only speak of what they should do. Locke.

UNATTAINABLENESS. n. f. State of being out of reach.
Desire is stopped by the opinion of the impossibility, or unattainableness of the good proposed. Locke.

UNATTEMPTED. adj. Untried; not assayed.
He left no means unattempted of destroying his son. Sidney.
Not that I have the power to clutch my hand,
When his fair angels would salute my palm;
But that my hand, as unattempted yet,
Like a poor beggar, ralleth on the rich. Shakespeare.

UNA

It pursues
Things unattempted yet in prose or rhyme. Milton.
Leave nothing unattempted to destroy
That perjur'd race. Denham.
Shall we be discouraged from any attempt of doing good, by the possibility of our failing in it? How many of the best things would, at this rate, have been left unattempted? Asterb.
UNATTENDED. adj. Having no retinue, or attendants.
Your constancy
Hath left you unattended. Shaksp. Macbeth.
With goddess-like demeanor forth she went,
Not unattended. Milton's Par. Lost.
Such unattended generals can never make a revolution in Parnassus. Dryden.
UNATTENDING. adj. Not attending.
Ill is lost that praise,
That is address'd to unattending ears. Milton.
Ev'ry nymph of the flood, her tresses rending,
Throws off her armlet of pearl in the main;
Neptune in anguish his charge unattending,
Vessels are found'ring, and vows are in vain. Dryden.
UNATTENTIVE. adj. Not regarding.
Man's nature is so unattentive to goods, that there can scarce be too many monitors. Government of the Tongue.
Such things are not accompanied with show, and therefore seldom draw the eyes of the unattentive. Tatler, N. 55.
UNATTENDED. adj. Not expiated.
Could you afford him such a bribe as that,
A brother's blood yet unattended? Reeve.
UNAVAILABLE. adj. Useless; vain with respect to any purpose.
When we have endeavoured to find out the strongest causes, wherefore they should imagine that reading is so un- available, the most we can learn is, that sermons are the ordinance of God, the scriptures dark, and the labour of reading easy. Hooker.
UNAVAILABLE. adj. Useless; vain.
Since my inevitable death you know,
You safely unavailable pity flow:
'Tis popular to mourn a dying foe. Dryden's Aurengzebe.
Supine he tumbles on the crimson sands,
Before his helpless friends and native bands,
And spreads for aid his unavailable hands. Pope.
UNAVOIDABLE. adj.
1. Inevitable; not to be shunned.
Oppression on one side, and ambition on the other, are the unavoidable occasions of war. Dryden.
It is unavoidable to all, to have opinions, without certain proofs of their truth. Locke.
Single acts of transgression will, through weakness and surprise, be unavoidable to the best guarded. Rogers.
The merits of Christ will make up the unavoidable deficiencies of our service; will prevail for pardon to our sincere repentance. Rogers.
All sentiments of worldly grandeur vanish at that unavoid- able moment, which decides the destiny of men. Clarissa.
2. Not to be missed in ratiocination.
That something is of itself, is self-evident, because we see things are; and the things that we see must either have had some first cause of their being, or have been always, and of themselves: one of them is unavoidable. Tillotson.
I think it unavoidable for every rational creature, that will examine his own or any other existence, to have the notion of an eternal, wise being, who had no beginning. Locke.
UNAVOIDABLENESS. n. f. Inevitability.
How can we conceive it subject to material impressions?
and yet the importunity of pain, and unavoidableness of sensations, strongly persuade that we are so. Glanville.
UNAVOIDABLY. adv. Inevitably.
The most perfect administration must unavoidably produce opposition from multitudes who are made happy by it. Addison.
UNAVOIDED. adj. Inevitable.
We see the very wreck that we must suffer;
And unavoided is the danger now. Shaksp.
Rare poems ask rare friends;
Yet satyrs, since the most of mankind be Their unavoided subject, fewest see. B. Johnson.
UNAUTHORISED. adj. Not supported by authority; not properly commissioned.
To kiss in private?
An unauthorized kiss. Shaksp. Othello.
It is for you to ravage seas and land,
Unauthoriz'd by my supreme command. Dryden.
UNAWARE. adv. [from aware, or wary.]
UNAWARES. adv.
1. Without thought; without previous meditation.
It is my father's face,
Whom, in this conflict, I unawares have kill'd. Shaksp.
Firm we submit; yet possible to swerve,
And fall into deception unawares. Milton.

UNB

A pleasant beverage he prepar'd before,
Of wine and honey mix'd; with added store
Of opium: to his keeper this he brought,
Who swallow'd unawares the sleepy draught,
And snor'd secure. Dryden.
'Tis a sensation like that of a limb lopp'd off; one is trying every minute unawares to use it, and finds it is not. Pope.
2. Unexpectedly; when it is not thought of; suddenly.
Take heed lest you fall unawares into that inconvenience you formerly found fault with. Sponser.
Left destruction come upon him at unawares, and let his net that he hath hid, catch himself. Palm xxxvi. 8.
My hand, unawares to me, was, by the force of that endeavour it just before employed to sustain the fallen weight, carried up with such violence, that I bruised it. Boyle.
He breaks at unawares upon our walks.
And, like a midnight wolf, invades the fold. Dryden.
Though we live never so long, we are still surprized: we put the evil day far from us, and then it catches us unawares, and we tremble at the prospect. Wale.
UNAWED. adj. Unrestrained by fear or reverence.
The raging and fanatic dissemp of the house of commons must be attributed to the want of such good ministers of the crown, as, being unawed by any guilt of their own,
could have watched other mens. Clarendon.
Unforc'd by punishment, unaw'd by fear,
His words were simple, and his soul sincere. Dryden.
UNBAKED. adj.
1. Not tamed; not taught to bear the rider.
Then I beat my tabor;
At which, like unbaked colts, they prick'd their ears,
Advanc'd their eyelids, lifted up their noses,
As they smelt musick. Shaksp. Temp.
A well wayed horse will safely convey thee to thy journey's end, when an unbaked filly may give thee a fall. Swilling.
They flinch like unbaked fillies. Dennis's Letters.
2. Not countenanced; not aided.
Let the weight of thine own infamy
Fall on thee unsupported, and unbaked. Daniel's Civil War.
UNBALANCED. adj. Not poised; not in equipoise.
Let earth unbalanced from her orbit fly,
Planets and suns run lawless through the sky. Pope.
UNBALANCED. adj. Not kept steady by ballast; unsteady.
They having but newly left those grammatick flats, where they stuck unreasonably, to learn a few words with lamenatable construction; and now on the sudden transported under another climate, to be tost and turmoil'd with their unbalanced wits, in fathomless and unquiet deeps of controversy, do, for the most part, grow into hatred of learning. Milton.
As at sea th' unbalanced vessel rides,
Cast to and fro, the sport of winds and tides:
So in the bounding chariot tost'd on high,
The youth is hurly'd headlong through the sky. Addison.
UNBAND. adj. [from band.] Wanting a string, or band.
Your hose should be ungarter'd, your bonnet unbanded, and every thing demonstrating a careless desolation. Shaksp.
UNBAR. v. a. [from bar.] To open, by removing the bars; to unbolt.
'Tis not secure, this place or that to guard,
If any other entrance stand unbar'd. Denham.
These rites the king refus'd,
Deaf to their cries; nor would the gates unbar
Of sacred peace, or loose th' imprison'd war. Dryden.
UNBARRED. adj. [from bar, Lat.] Not shaven. Out of use.
Must I go shew them my unbarred scone?
Must my base tongue give to my noble heart
A lie? Shaksp. Coriolanus.
UNBARKED. adj. [from bark.] Decorticated; stripped of the bark.
A branch of a tree, unbarked some space at the bottom, and so set in the ground, hath grown. Bacon.
UNBASIFUL. adj. Impudent; shameless.
Nor did I with unbasiful forehead woo
The means of weakness and debility. Shaksp. Lear.
UNBATED. adj. [from bate.] Not repressed; not blunted.
Where is the horse, that doth untread again
His tedious measures with th' unbated fire
That he did pace them first? Shaksp. Merch. of Venice.
UNBATHED. adj. [from bath.] Not wet.
Fierce Palimond, their passage to prevent,
Thrust full on Cymon's back in his descent;
The blade return'd unbathed, and to the handle bent. Dryden.
UNBATTERED. adj. Not injured by blows.
I cannot strike at wretched kernes, whose arms
Are hid'd to bear their slaves: or thou, Macbeth;
Or else my sword, with an unbattered edge,
I sheath again undeeded. Shaksp. Macbeth.
UNBEARING. adj. Bringing no fruit.

UNB

He with his pruning hook disjoins
Unbearing branches from their head,
And grafts more happy in their stead. Dryden.
To UNBAY. v. a. To set open; to free from the restraint of mounds.
I ought now to loose the reins of my affections, to unbay
the current of my passion, and love on without boundary or measure. Norris's Miscellany.
UNBEATEN. adj.
1. Not treated with blows.
His mare was truer than his chronicle;
For he had rode five miles unpurr'd, unbeaten,
And then at last turn'd tail towards Neweaton. Bp. Corbet.
2. Not trodden.
We must tread unbeaten paths, and make a way where we do not find one; but it shall be always with a light in our hand. Bacon.
If your bold muse dare tread unbeaten paths. Rescommon.
Virtue, to crown her fav'rites, loves to try
Some new, unbeaten passage to the sky. Swift.
UNBECOMING. adj. Indecent; unfit; indecorous.
Here's our chief guest. —
If he had been forgotten,
It had been as a gap in our great feast,
And all things unbecoming. Shaksp. Macbeth.
None of retreat, no unbecoming deed
That argu'd fear. Milton's Par. Lost.
I should rather believe that the nose was the seat of wrath in beasts than in mankind; and that it was unbecoming of any but Pan, who had very much of the beast in him, to wrinkle up his nose in anger. Dryden.
My grief lets unbecoming speeches fall:
I should have dy'd, and not complain'd at all. Dryden.
This petulancy in conversation prevails among some of that sex, where it appears the most unbecoming and unnatural. Addison's Freeholder.
Men of wit, learning, and virtue, might strike out every offensive or unbecoming passage from plays. Swift.
Such proceed upon debates without unbecoming warmth. Swift.
UNBECOMINGNESS. n. f. Indecency; indecorum.
If words are sometimes to be used, they ought to be grave, kind and sober, representing the ill or unbecomingness of the fault. Locke.
To UNBED. v. a. To raise from a bed.
Eels unbed themselves, and stir at the noise of thunder. Walton's Angler.
UNBESITTING. adj. Not becoming; not suitable.
Love is full of unbesitting strains,
All wanton as a child, skipping in vain. Shaksp.
Far be it that I should write thee sin, or blame!
Or think thee unbesitting holiest place. Milton.
He might several times have made peace with his discontented subjects upon terms not at all unbesitting his dignity or interest; but he rather chose to sacrifice the whole alliance to his private passion. Swift.
To UNBEGE'T. v. n. To deprive of existence.
Wishes each minute he could unbeget
Those rebel sons, who dare t' usurp his seat. Dryden.
UNBEGOT. adj. [from beget.]
UNBEGOTTEN. adj.
1. Eternal; without generation.
Why should he attribute the same honour to matter, which is subject to corruption, as to the eternal, unbegotten, and immutable God? Stillington.
2. Not yet generated.
God omnipotent, must'ring
Armies of pestilence; and they shall strike
Your children yet unborn, and unbegot. Shaksp.
In thy pow'r
It lies yet, ere conception, to prevent
The race unblest, to being yet unbegot. Milton's Par. Lost.
Where a child finds his own parents his perverters, better were it for him to have been unborn and unbegot, than ask a blessing of those whose conversation breathes nothing but a curse. South's Sermons.
To UNBEGUILE. v. a. To undeceive; to set free from the influence of any deceit.
Then unbeguile thyself, and know with me,
That angels, though on earth employ'd they be,
Are still in heav'n. Denne.
Their comeliness unbeguiled the vulgar of the odd opinion the loyalists had formerly infused into them, by their conjunctory invectives. Howel's Vocal Forest.
UNBENEFIT. adj. Unseen; not discoverable to the sight.
These then, though unbenefit in deep of night,
Shine not in vain. Milton.
1. Incredulity.
'Tis not vain or fabulous,
What the sage poets, taught by th' heav'nly muse,

UNB

Storied of old in high immortal verse,
Of dire chimera's, and enchanted isles,
And rifted rocks, whose entrance leads to hell,
For such there be, but unbelief is blind. Milton.
I'm justly plagu'd by this your unbelief,
And am myself the cause of my own grief. Dryden.
Such an universal acquaintance with things will keep you from an excess of credulity and unbelief; i. e. a readiness to believe, or to deny every thing at first hearing. Watts.
2. Infidelity; irreligion.
Where profess'd unbelief is, there can be no visible church of Christ; there may be where found belief wanteth. Hooker.
To UNBELIEVE. v. a.
1. To discredit; not to trust.
Heav'n shield your grace from woe,
As I, thus wrong'd, hence unbelieved go. Shaksp.
So great a prince and favourite so suddenly metamorphosed into travellers with no greater train, was enough to make any man unbelieve his five senses. Wotton's Buckingham.
2. Not to think real or true.
Nor lets than sight and hearing could convince,
Of such an unforeseen and unbelieved offence. Dryden.
UNBELIEVER. n. f. An infidel; one who believes not the scripture of God.
The ancient fathers being often constrained to shew, what warrant they had so much to rely upon the scriptures, endeavoured still to maintain the authority of the books of God, by arguments such as unbelievers themselves must needs think reasonable, if they judged thereof as they should. Hooker.
What endless war wou'd jealous nations tear,
If none above did witness what they swear?
Sad fate of unbelievers, and yet just,
Among themselves to find no little trust. Waller.
In the new testament, religion is usually expressed by faith in God and Christ, and the love of them. Hence it is that true christians are so frequently called believers; and wicked and ungodly men unbelievers. Tillotson.
He pronounces the children of such parents as were, one of them a christian, and the other an unbeliever, holy, on account of the faith and holiness of that one. Asterbury.
Men always grow vicious before they become unbelievers;
but if you would once convince profligates by topics drawn from the view of their own quiet reputation, and health, their infidelity would soon drop off. Swift's Miscellanies.
UNBELIEVING. adj. Infidel.
No pause,
No stay of slaughter found his vigorous arm;
But th' unbelieving squadrons turn'd to flight,
Smote in the rear. Phillips.
This wrought the greatest confusion in the unbelieving
Jews, and the greatest conviction in the Gentiles. Addison.
In the days of the apostle, when all who professed themselves disciples of Christ were converts of conscience, this severe censure might be restrained to the unbelieving part of mankind. Rogers's Sermons.
UNBELOVED. adj. Not loved.
Who'er you are, not unbelov'd by heav'n,
Since on our friendly shore your ships are driv'n. Dryden.
To UNBEND. v. a. To relax; to remit; to ease.
You unbend your noble strength, to think So brain-sickly of things. Shaksp. Macbeth.
It is lawful to relax and unbend our bow, but not to suffer it to be unready, or unstrung. Taylor's Holy Living.
Here have I seen the king, when great affairs
Gave leave to slacken and unbend his cares, Attended to the chase by all the flow'r of youth. Denham.
From those great cares when ease your soul unbends,
Your pleasures are design'd to noble ends. Dryden.
I must be in the battle; but I'll go
With empty quiver, and unbended bow. Dryden.
UNBENDING. adj.
1. Not suffering flexure.
Not so, when swift Camilla scours the plain,
Flies o'er th' unbending corn, and skirts along the main. Pope.
2. Devoted to relaxation.
Since what was omitted in the acting is now kept in, I hope it may entertain your lordship at an unbending hour. Reeve.
UNBENEVOLENT. adj. Not kind.
A religion which not only forbids, but by its natural influence sweetens all bitterness and asperity of temper, and corrects that selfish narrowness of spirit, which inclines men to a fierce, unbenevolent behaviour. Rogers's Sermons.
UNBENEFICED. adj. Not preferred to a benefice.
More vacant pulpits wou'd more converts make;
All wou'd have latitude enough to take;
The rest unbenefic'd your sects maintain. Dryden.
UNBENIGHTED. adj. Never visited by darkness.
Beyond the polar circles; to them day
Had unbenighted shone, while the low sun,
To recompence his distance, in their light
Had rounded still the horizon. Milton's Par. Lost.
9
UNBENIGN.

U N B

UNBENIGN. adj. Malignant; malevolent.
To th' other five
Their planetary motions, and aspects,
In textile, square, and trine, and opposite,
Of noxious efficacy; and when to join
In synod unbeneign. Milton's Par. Lost, b. x. l. 661.

UNBENT. adj.
1. Not strained by the string.
Apollo heard, and conqu'ring his disdain,
Unbent his bow, and Greece inspir'd again. Dryden.
2. Having the bow unstrung.
Why hast thou gone so far,
To be unbent when thou hast ta'en thy stand,
Th' elected deer before thee? Shakep. Cymbeline.
3. Not crushed; not subdued.
But thou, secure of soul, unbent with woes,
The more thy fortune frowns, the more oppost. Dryden.
4. Relaxed; not intent.
Be not always on affairs intent,
But let thy thoughts be easy and unbent:
When our mind's eyes are disengag'd and free,
They clearer, farther, and distinctly see. Denham.

UNBESPEMING. adj. Unbecoming.
No emotion of passion transported me by the indignity of his carriage, to do or say any thing unbecoming myself. K. Charles.
Far be the spirit of the chase from them;
Uncomely courage, unbecoming skill. Thomson.

UNBESOURT. adj. Not intreated.
Left heat should injure us, his timely care
Hath, unbesought, provided; and his hands
Cloath'd us unworthy; pitying while he judg'd. Milton.

UNBESTOWED. adj. Not given; not disposed of.
He had now but one son and one daughter unbeflowed. Bacon.

UNBETRAYED. adj. Not betrayed.
Many being privy to the fact,
How hard is it to keep it unbetray'd? Daniel's Civil War.

UNBEWAILED. adj. Not lamented.
Hold unbewail'd their way. Shakep. Ant. and Cleopatra.

TO UNBETWICH. v. a. [from with.] To free from fascination, To UNBLASS. v. a. To free from any external motive; to dilettangle from prejudice.
That our understandings may be free to examine, and reason unbias'd give its judgment; being that whereon a right direction of our conduct to true happiness depends; it is in this we should employ our chief care. Locke.
The standing evidences of the gospel, every time they are consider'd, gain upon sincere, unbias'd minds. Atterbury.
The truest service a private man may do his country, is by unbiasing his mind, as much as possible, between the rival powers. Swift.
Where's the man who counsel can bestow,
Unbias'd, or by favour, or by spite;
Not dully prepossess'd, nor blindly right. Pope.

UNBIASSEDLY. adj. Without external influence; without prejudice.
I have sought the true meaning; and have unbias'dly embraced each, upon a fair enquiry, appeared so to me. Locke.

UNBID. adj.
1. Uninvited.
Unbidden guests
Are often welcome when they are gone. Shakep.
2. Uncommanded; spontaneous.
Thorns also and thistles it shall bring thee forth Unbid. Milton's Par. Lost, b. x. l. 204.
Roses unbids, and ev'ry fragrant flow'r,
Flew from their stalks, to throw thy nuptial bow'r. Dryden.
Unbidden earth shall wreathing ivy bring,
And fragrant herbs the promises of spring. Dryden.

UNBIDDEN. adj. Free from bigotry.
Erasmus, who was an unbidded Roman Catholic, was so much transported with this passage of Socrates, that he could scarce forbear looking upon him as a saint, and desiring him to pray for him. Addison.

TO UNBIND. v. a. [from bind.] To loose; to untie.
His own woe's author, who bound it finds,
As did Pyrocles, and it willfully unbinds. Fairy Queen.
Ye Latian dames,
If there be here, who dare maintain
My right, nor think the name of mother vain,
Unbind your fillets, loose your flowing hair,
And orgies, and nocturnal rites prepare. Dryden.
On the sixth instant it was thought fit to unbind his head. Tatler, N^o. 55.

TO UNBISHOP. v. a. [from bishop.] To deprive of episcopal orders.
I cannot look upon Titus as so far unbishop'd yet, but that he still exhibits to us all the essentials of jurisdiction. South.

UNBITTED. adj. [from bit.] Unbridled; unrestrained.
We have reason to cool our raging motions, our carnal fings, our unbitted lusts; whereof I take this love to be a reel or cyon. Shakep. Othello.

U N B

UNBLAMABLE. adj. Not culpable; not to be charged with a fault.
Much more could I say concerning this unblamable inequality of fines and rates. Bacon.
He lov'd his people, him they idoliz'd;
And thence proceeds my mortal hatred to him;
That thus unblamable to all beside,
He err'd to me alone. Dryden's Don Sebastian.

UNBLAMABLY. adv. Without taint of fault.
Ye are witnesses, and God also, how holily, and justly, and unblamably we behaved ourselves. Thess. ii. 10.

UNBLAMED. adj. Blameless; free from fault.
Shall spend your days in joy unblam'd, and dwell Long time in peace. Milton's Par. Lost, b. xii. l. 22.
Unblam'd, abundance crown'd the royal board,
What time this dome rever'd her prudent lord,
Who now is doom'd to mourn. Pope's Odyssey.

UNBLEMISHED. adj. Free from turpitude; free from reproach;
free from deformity.
O welcome, pure-ey'd faith, white-handed hope;
Thou hovering angel, girl with golden wings,
And thou unblemish'd form of chastity.
Under this stone lies virtue, youth,
Unblemish'd probity, and truth.
Is none worthy to be made a wife
In all this town? Suppose her free from strife, Rich, fair, and fruitful; of unblemish'd life. Dryden.
They appointed, out of these new converts, men of the best sense, and of the most unblemish'd lives, to preside over these several assemblies. Addison.

UNBLEMISHED. adj. Not mingled.
None can boast a knowledge deputed from desilement, within this atmosphere of flesh; it dwells no where in unblemished proportions on this side the empyreum. Glaville.

UNBLEMISHED. adj. Not disgraced; not injured by any fault.
There, where very desolation dwells,
She may pass on with unblemish'd majesty:
Be it not done in pride, or in presumption. Milton.

UNBLEST. adj.
1. Accursed; excluded from benediction.
It is a shameful and unblest thing, to take the scum of people, and wicked, condemned men, to be the people with whom you plant. Bacon.
2. Wretched; unhappy.
In thy pow'r
It lies yet, ere conception, to prevent
The race unblest, to being yet unbegot. Milton.
What is true passion, if unblest it dies?
And where is Emma's joy, if Henry flies? Prior.

UNBLOODED. adj. Not stained with blood.
Who finds the partridge in the puttock's nest,
But may imagine how the bird was dead,
Although the kite fear with unbloody beak. Shakep.

UNBLOODY. adj. Not cruel; not shedding blood; not stained with blood.
Under the ledge of Atlas lies a cave,
The venerable seat of holy hermits,
Who there, secure in separated cells,
From the purling streams, and savage fruits,
Have wholesome bev'rage, and unbloody feasts. Dryden.

UNBLOWN. adj. Having the bud yet unexpanded.
Ah! my poor prince! Ah! my tender babes!
My unblown flowers, new-appearing sweets! Shakep.

UNBLUNTED. adj. Not becoming obtuse.
A sword, whose weight without a blow might slay;
Able, unblunted, to cut hoists away. Cervantes's Don Quixote.

UNBODIED. adj.
1. Imcorporeal; immaterial.
If we could conceive of things as angels and unbodied spirits do, without involving them in those clouds language throws upon them, we should seldom be in danger of such mistakes as are perpetually committed. Watts's Logic.
2. Freed from the body.
She hath the bonds broke of eternal night;
Her soul unbodied of the burdensome corpse. Spenser.
All things are but alter'd, nothing dies;
And here and there th' unbodied spirit flies. Dryden.

UNBOILED. adj. Not foddin.
A quarter of a pint of rice unboiled, will arise to a pint boiled. Bacon.

TO UNBOIL. v. a. To let open; to unbar.
I'll call my uncle down;
He shall unboil the gates. Shakep. Troilus and Cressida.

UNBOILED. adj. Coarse; gross; not refined, as flour by bolting or sifting.
I will tread this unboiled villain into mortar, and daub the wall of a jakes with him. Shakep. Henry's K. Lear.

UNBONNETTED. adj. Wanting a hat or bonnet.
This night, wherein
The lion, and the belly-pinched wolf
Keep their fur dry; unbommetted he runs,
And bids what will, take all. Shakep. K. Lear.

UNBRO'EN. adj.
1. Not studios of books.
2. Not cultivated by erudition.
As he shall smile, Othello shall go mad;
And his unbrokeish jealousy must contrive
Poor Cassio's smiles, gestures, and light behaviour, Quite in the wrong. Shakep. Othello.

UNBORN. adj. Not yet brought into life; future; being to come.
Some unborn sorrow, ripe in fortune's womb,
Is coming tow'rd me. Shakep. Richard II.
The woes to come, the children yet unborn Shall feel this day, as sharp to them as thorn. Shakep.
Never so much as in a thought unborn,
Did I offend you. Shakep. As you like it.
He on the wings of cherubim
Up-lifted, in paternal glory rode Far into chaos, and the world unborn. Milton's Par. Lost.
To what wretched state refer'd!
Better end here unborn! Why is life giv'n
To be thus wail'd from us? Milton's Par. Lost.
A queen, from whom
The souls of kings unborn for bodies wait. Dryden.

UNBORROWED. adj. Genuine; native; one's own.
But the luxurious father of the fold,
With native purple, and unborrow'd gold,
Beneath his pompous fleece shall proudly sweat. Dryden.
In substances, especially those which the common and unborrow'd names of any language are applied to, some remarkable, sensible qualities, serve to distinguish one from another. Locke.

UNBOTTOMED. adj.
1. Without bottom; bottomless.
The dark, unbottom'd, infinite abyss. Milton.
2. Having no solid foundation.
This is a special act of christian hope, to be thus unbottom'd of ourselves, and fastened upon God, with a full reliance, trust, and dependance on his mercy. Hammond.

TO UNBOSOM. v. a.
1. To reveal in confidence.
I lov'd thee, as too well thou knew'st;
Too well, unbosom'd all my secrets to thee,
Not out of levity, but overpower'd
By thy request, who could deny thee nothing. Milton.
Do we unbosom all our secrets to him, and hide nothing that passeth in the depth of our hearts from him? Atterbury.
2. To open; to disclose.
Should I thence, hurried on viewless wing,
Take up a weeping on the mountains wild,
The gentle neighbourhood of grove and spring
Would soon unbosom all their echo's mild. Milton.

UNBOUGHT. adj.
1. Obtained without money.
The unbought dainties of the poor. Dryden's Horace.
2. Not finding any purchaser.
The merchant will leave our native commodities unbought upon the hands of the farmer, rather than export them to a market, which will not afford him returns with profit. Locke.

UNBOUND. adj.
1. Loose; not tied.
2. Wanting a cover.
He that has complex ideas, without particular names for them, would be in no better case than a bookfeller, who had volumes that lay unbound, and without titles; which he could make known to others, only by shewing the loose sheets. Locke.
3. Preterite of unbind.
Some from their chains the faithful dogs unbound. Dryden.

UNBOUND. adj.
1. Infinite; interminable.
Long were to tell what I have done;
I voyag'd the unreal, vast, unbounded deep
Of horrible confusion. Milton.
The wide, th' unbounded prospect lies before me;
But shadows, clouds, and darkness rest upon it. Addison.
2. Unlimited; unrestrained.
He was a man
Of an unbounded stomach, ever ranking Himself with princes. Shakep. Henry VI.
He had given his curiosity its full, unbounded range, and exa-min'd not only in contemplation, but by sensitive experiment, whatever could be good for the sons of men. Decay of Piety.

UNBOUNDLESSLY. adv. Without bounds; without limits.
So unboundedly mischievous is that petulant member, that heaven and earth are not wide enough for its range, but it will find work at home too. Government of the Tongue.

UNBOUNDNESS. n. f. Exemption from limits.
Finitude, applied to created things, imports the proportions of the several properties of these things to one another. Infinitude, the unboundness of these degrees of properties. Cheyne.

UNBOWED. adj. Not bent.
He knits his brow, and frowns an angry eye,
And passeth with stiff, unbowed knee,
Disdaining duty that to us belongs. Shakep. Hen. VI.

U N B

TO UNBOWEL. v. n. To exenterate; to eviscerate.
In this chapter I'll unbowel the state of the question. Hakewill.
It is now become a new species of divinity, to branch out with fond distinctions our holy faith, which the pious simplicity of the first christians received to practice; not to read upon as an anatomy, unbowel and dissect to try experiments. Decay of Piety.

TO UNBRA'CE. v. a.
1. To loose; to relax.
With whose reproach and odious menace,
The knight embolling in his haughty heart,
Knit all his forces, and gan soon unbrace
His grasping hold. Fairy Queen, b. 2. c. 4. st. 9.
Somewhat of mournful fure my ears does wound;
Drums unbraced, with soldiers broken cries. Dryden.
Nought shall the ptery and the harp avail,
When the quick spirits their warm march forbear,
And numbing coldness has unbrac'd the ear. Prior.
Waiting years, that wither human race,
Exhaust thy spirits, and thy arms unbrace. Pope's Iliad.

2. To make the clothes loose.
Is it physical,
To walk unbrac'd, and suck up the humours
Of the dank morning? Shakep. Julius Caesar.
Hamlet, with his doublet all unbrac'd;
No hat upon his head, his stockings loose. Shakep.

UNBREATHED. v. a. Not exercised.
They now have told their unbreath'd memories,
With this fame play against our nuptials. Shakep.

UNBREATHING. adj. Unanimated.
They spake not a word;
But like dumb statues, or unbreathing stones,
Star'd each on other, and look'd deadly pale. Shakep.

UNBRED. adj.
1. Not instructed in civility; ill educated.
Unbred minds must be a little sent abroad. Gov. of Tongue.
Children learn from unbred or debauched servants, un-towardly tricks. Locke on Education.
Sure never any thing was so unbred as that odious man. Congreve's Way of the World.
2. Not taught.
A warrior dame,
Unbred to spinning, in the loom unskill'd. Dryden.

UNBREECH'D. adj. Having no breeches.
Looking on my boy's face, methoughts I did recoil Twenty-three years, and saw myself unbreech'd,
In my green velvet coat. Shakep. Winter Tale.

UNBRI'ED. adj. Not influenced by money or gifts; not hired.
The soul gave all;
Unbri'd it gave; or, if a bribe appear,
No less than heav'n. Dryden.
To succour the distress'd;
Unbri'd by love; untrifled by threats. A. Phillips.

UNBRI'DLED. adj. Licentious; not restrained.
This is not well, rash and unbri'dled boy,
To fly the favours of so good a king. Shakep.
We have considered religious zeal, which transgresses in unbridled excess. Sparr's Sermons.
To what licence
Dares thy unbri'dled boldness run itself? B. Johnson.

UNBRO'KE. adj. [from break.]
1. Not violated.
God pardon all oaths, that are broke to me;
God keep all vows unbroke, are made to thee. Shakep.
Some married persons, even in their marriage, do please God, by preserving their faith unbroke. Taylor.
He first broke peace in heav'n, and faith, till then Unbroke. Milton.
2. Not subdued; not weakened.
From his seat the Pylion prince arose:
Two centuries already he fulfill'd;
And now began the third, unbroke yet. Dryden.
How broad his shoulders spread! by age unbroke! Pope.
3. Not tamed.
A lonely cow,
Unworn with yokes, unbroke to the plow. Addison.

UNBROTHERLIKE. adj. Ill suiting with the character of a brother.
Victor's unbrotherlike heat towards the eastern churches, fomented that difference about Easter into a schism. Decay of Piety.

UNBRUISED. adj. Not bruised; not hurt.
On Dardan plains,
The fresh, and yet unbruised Greeks do pitch
Their brave pavilions. Shakep.
Thou' years upon thee, and thou art too full
Of the war's furcits, to go rove with one That's yet unbruised. Shakep. Coriolanus.
Care keeps his watch in ev'ry old man's eye:
And where care lodgeth, sleep will never lie;
But where unbruised youth, with unfift brain,
Doth couch his limbs, there golden sleep doth reign. Shakep.

UNC

To UNBUCKLE. v. a. To loose from buckles.
We have been down together in my sleep,
Unbuckling helms; sitting each other's throat,
And wak'd half dead with nothing. Shakefp. Coriolanus.
He that unbuckles this, till we do please
To doff't for our purpose, shall hear a storm. Shakefp.
His starry helm unbuckled, shew'd him prime In manhood, where youth ended. Milton's Par. Lost.
Laid their bright arms along the fable shore. Pope.
To UNBUILD. v. a. To raze; to destroy.
This is the way to kindle, not to quench;
To unbuild the city, and to lay all flat. Shakefp. Titus Andronicus.
What will they then but unbuild
His living temples, built by faith to stand;
Their own faith, not another's? Milton's Par. Lost.
UNBUILT. adj. Not yet erected.
Built walls you thum, unbuilt you see. Dryden.
UNBURIED. adj. Not interred; not honoured with the rites of funeral.
Why suffer'st thou thy sons, unburi'd yet,
To hover on the dreadful shore of Styx? Shakefp. Titus Andronicus.
The moss which groweth upon the skull of a dead man unburied, will staunch blood potentially. Bacon.
The hardest ingredient to come by, is the moss upon the skull of a dead man unburi'd. Bacon.
Him double cares attend,
For his unburi'd soldiers, and his friend. Dryden.
Breathless he lies; and his unburi'd ghost,
Depriv'd of funeral rites, pollutes your host. Dryden.
The wand'ring ghosts
Of king's unburi'd on the wasted coasts. Pope's Statius.
UNBURIED. adj. Not buried.
UNBURIED. adj. Not buried.
1. Not confin'd; not wasted; not injured by fire.
Creon denies the rites of funeral fire to those,
Whose breathless bodies yet he calls his foes;
Unburi'd, unburi'd, on a heap they lie. Dryden.
2. Not heated with fire.
Burnt wine is more hard and astringent, than wine unburi'd. Bacon's Nat. Hist. N. 898.
UNBURNING. adj. Not consuming by heat.
What we have said of the unburning fire called light, streaming from the flame of a candle, may easily be applied to all other light deprived of sensible heat. Digby.
To UNBURTHEN. v. a.
1. To rid of a load.
We'll shake all cares and business from our age, Conferring them on younger strengths; while we Unburden'd crawl toward death. Shakefp. K. Lear.
2. To throw off.
Sharp Buckingham unburthen with his tongue
The envious load that lies upon his heart. Shakefp.
3. To disclose what lies heavy on the mind.
From your love I have a warranty
T' unburthen all my plots and purposes,
How to get clear of all the debts I owe. Shakefp.
To UNBUTTON. v. a. To loose any thing buttoned.
Thou art fat-witted with drinking old sack, and unbuttoning thee after supper. Shakefp. Hen. IV.
Many catch cold on the breast, by leaving their doublets unbuttoned. Harvey on Consumption.
His silk waistcoat was unbuttoned in several places. Addison.
UNCALCINED. adj. Free from calcination.
A saline substance, subtler than sal ammoniac, carried up with it, uncalcined gold in the form of subtle exhalations.
UNCALLED. adj. Not summoned; not sent for; not demanded.
Basilus had servants, who, though they came not uncalled, yet at call were ready. Sidney.
He, bolder now, uncalled before her flood. Milton.
Mild Lucina came uncalled, and stood Beside the struggling boughs, and heard the groan,
Then reach'd her midwife hand to speed the throes. Dryden.
To UNCALM. adj. To disturb.
What strange disquiet has uncalm'd your breast,
Inhuman fair, to rob the dead of rest? Dryden.
UNCANCELLED. adj. Not erased; not abrogated.
I only mourn my yet uncancell'd score;
You put me past the pow'r of paying more. Dryden.
UNCANONICAL. adj. Not agreeable to the canons.
UNCAPABLE. adj. [incapable, Fr. incapax, Lat.] Not capable;
not susceptible.
Thou art come to answer
A stony adversary, an inhuman wretch,
Uncapable of pity, void and empty
From any dram of mercy. Shakefp. Mer. of Venice.
He who believes himself incapable of pardon, goes on without any care of reforming. Hammond.
This, whilst they are under the deceit of it, makes them incapable of conviction; and they applaud themselves as zealous

UNC

lous champions for truth, when indeed they are contending for error.
UNCARED for. adj. Not regarded; not attended to. Locke.
Their kings, to better their worldly estate, left their own and their people's ghostly condition uncared for.
UNCARINATE. adj. Not fleshy.
Nor need we be afraid to ascribe that to the incarnate son, which sometimes is attributed unto the incarnate father. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
To UNCASE. v. a. To strip; to uncover.
1. To disengage from any covering.
See Pompey is uncasing for the combat. Shakefp.
Thou shalt be master, Tranio, in my stead.
'Tis hatch'd, and shall be so: Tranio, at once Uncase thee; take my colour'd hat and cloak. Shakefp.
Partly by his voice, and partly by his ears, was discover'd; and consequently uncased, well laugh'd at, and well cudgell'd. L'Estrange.
Uncase me, and do with me what you please. Addison.
2. To slay.
All men him uncased 'gan deride.
UNCAUGHT. adj. Not yet caught. Hubbard's Tale.
Let him fly far;
Not in this land shall he remain uncapt,
And found dispatch'd. Shakefp. K. Lear.
His bosom glows with treasures yet uncapt. Gay.
UNCAUSED. adj. Having no precedent cause.
UNCAUTIOUS. adj. Not wary; heedless.
Unforeseen, they say, is unprepared:
Uncautious Arcite thought himself alone. Dryden.
UNCELEBRATED. adj. Not solemnized.
Thus was the first day, ev'n and morn;
Nor pass'd uncelebrated, nor unsung
By the celestial choirs. Milton's Par. Lost, b. vii. l. 253.
UNCELSURED. adj. Exempt from public reproach.
How difficult must it be for any ruler to live uncelesured, where every one of the community is thus qualified for modelling the constitution? Addison's Freeholder.
Fear most to tax an honourable fool,
Whose right it is uncelesured to be dull.
To be uncelesured, and to be obscure, is the same thing. Pope's Letters.
UNCERTAIN. adj. [incertain, Fr. incertain, Lat.]
1. Doubtful; not certainly known.
That sacred pile, so vast, so high,
That whether 'tis a part of earth or sky,
Uncertain seems; and may be thought a proud Aspiring mountain, or descending cloud. Denham.
2. Doubtful; not having certain knowledge.
Man, without the protection of a superior being, is secure of nothing that he enjoys, and uncertain of every thing that he hopes for. Tillotson.
Condemned on Caucasus to lie,
Still to be dying, not to die;
With certain pain, uncertain of relief,
True emblem of a wretched lover's grief. Graville.
3. Not sure in the consequence.
I must be married to my brother's daughter,
Or else my kingdom stands on brittle gla's:
Murder her brothers, and then marry her!
Uncertain way of gain! Shakespeare's Richard III.
Africanus young, and eager of his game,
Soon bent his bow, uncertain in his aim:
But the dire fiend the fatal arrow guides,
Which pierc'd his bowels through his panting sides. Dryden.
In the bright air the fauchion shone,
Or whistling flings dimits'd th' uncertain stone. Gay.
The search of our future being, is but a needless, anxious, and uncertain haste to be knowing, sooner than we can what, without all this solicitude, we shall know a little later. Pope.
4. Unsettled; irregular.
As the form of our public service is not voluntary, so neither are the parts thereof uncertain; but they are all set down in such order, and with such choice, as hath, in the wisdom of the church, seem'd best. Hooker.
UNCERTAINED. adj. Made uncertain. A word not used.
The diversity of seasons are not so uncertain by the sun and moon alone, who always keep one and the same course, but that the stars have also their working therein. Raleigh.
UNCERTAINTY. adv. Not surely; not certainly.
They that are past all hope of good, are past
All fear of ill: and yet if he be dead,
Speak softly, or uncertainly. Denham's Sappho.
Go, mortals, now, and vex yourselves in vain
For wealth, which so uncertainly must come:
When what was brought so far, and with such pain,
Was only kept to lose it nearer home.
Names must be of very unsteady meanings, if the ideas be referred to standards without us, that cannot be known at all, or but very imperfectly and uncertainly. Locke.

UNCERTAINTY. n. f.
1. Dubiousness; want of knowledge.
All great concerns must delays endure;
Rashness and haste make all things unsecure;
And if uncertain thy pretensions be,
Stay till fit time wear out uncertainty. Denham.
You common cry of curs, whose breath I hate,
Here remain with your uncertainty;
Let every feeble rumour shake your hearts.
That which makes doubtful and uncertainty in the fignification of some, more than other words, is the difference of ideas they stand for. Locke.
2. Contingency; want of certainty.
God's omniscience is a light shining into every dark corner, steadily grasping the greatest and most slippery uncertainties. South's Sermons.
3. Something unknown.
Our shepherd's care is every man's care, that quits a moral certainty for an uncertainty, and leaps from the honest business he was brought up to, into a trade he has no skill in. L'Estrange.
To UNCHAIN. v. a. To free from chains.
Minerva thus to Perseus lent her shield,
Secure of conquest, lent him to the field:
The hero acted what the queen ordain'd;
So was his fame complete, and Andromede unchain'd. Prior.
UNCHANGEABLE. adj. Immutable; not subject to variation.
If the end for which a law provideth, be perpetually necessary; and the way whereby it provideth perpetually also most apt, no doubt but that every such law ought for ever to remain unchangeable. Hooker, b. iii. §. 10.
UNCHANGED. adj.
1. Not altered.
When our fortunes are violently changed, our spirits are unchanged. Taylor's Rule of Holy Living.
More safe I sing with mortal voice; unchanged
To hoarse, or mute. Milton's Par. Lost.
2. Not alterable.
Dismiss thy fear,
And heav'n's unchang'd decrees attentive hear:
More pow'ful gods have torn thee from my side. Dryden.
Honour unchang'd, a principle profess,
Fixt to one side, but mod'rate to the rest. Pope.
UNCHANGABLENESS. n. f. Immutability.
This unchangeableness of colour I am now to describe. Newt.
UNCHANGABLY. adv. Immutably; without change.
All truth is unchangeably the same; that proposition, which is true at any time, being so for ever. South.
Her first order, disposition, frame,
Must then subsist unchangeably the same. Blackmore.
UNCHANGING. adj. Suffering no alteration.
But that thy face is, vizor-like, unchanging,
Made impudent with use of evil deeds,
I would essay, proud queen, to make thee blush. Shakefp.
True expression, like th' unchanging sun,
Clears and improves whatever it shines upon:
It gilds all objects, but it alters none. Pope.
To UNCHARGE. v. a. To retract an accusation.
Even his mother shall uncharge the practice,
And call it accident. Shakefp. Hamlet.
UNCHARGEABLE. adj. Contrary to charity; contrary to the universal love prescribed by christianity.
All the rich mines of learning ranack'd are
To furnish ammunition for this war;
Uncharitable zeal our reason whets,
And double edges on our passion sets. Denham.
This fills the minds of weak men with uncharitable interpretations of those actions of which they are not competent judges. Addison's Freeholder, N. 37.
UNCHARGEABLENESS. n. f. Want of charity.
The penitence of the criminal may have number'd him among the saints, when our untractable uncharitableness may send us to unquenchable flames. Govern. of the Tongue.
Heaven and hell are the proper regions of mercy and un-charitableness. Asterbury.
UNCHARGEABLY. adv. In a manner contrary to charity.
I did not mean the cutting off all that nation with the sword; which, far be it from me that I should ever think so desperately, or with so uncharitably. Spenser.
Urge neither charity nor shame to me;
Uncharitably with me have you dealt,
And shamefully my hopes by you are butcher'd. Shakefp.
Men, imprudently and uncharitably 'tween, employ their zeal for persons. Sprat.
UNCHARY. adj. Not wary; not cautious.
I've said too much unto a heart of stone,
And laid my honour too unchary out. Shakespeare.
UNCHASTE. adj. Lewd; libidinous; not continent; not chaste; not pure.

UNC

One, that in divers places I had heard before blazed, as the most impudently unchaste woman of all Asia. Sidney.
In my master's garments,
Which he inforc'd from me, away he posts
With unchaste purpose, to violate
My lady's honour. Shakefp. Cymbeline.
He hath given her his monumental ring, and thinks himself made in the unchaste composition. Shakespeare.
Whoever is unchaste, cannot reverence himself; and the reverence of a man's self is, next religion, the chiefest bridle of all vices. Bacon.
Lust, by unchaste looks,
Lets in deilement to the inward parts. Milton.
If she thinks to be separated by reason of her husband's unchaste life, then the man will be incurably ruined. Taylor.
UNCHASTITY. n. f. Lewdness; incontinence.
That generation was more particularly addicted to intemperance, sensuality, and unchastity. Woodward.
When the sun is among the horned signs, he may produce such a spirit of unchastity, as is dangerous to the honour of your worships families. Arbutnot.
UNCHASTEFULNESS. n. f. Melancholy; gloominess of temper.
Many, by a natural uncheerfulness of heart, love to indulge this uncomfortable way of life. Addison's Spectator.
UNCHECKED. adj. Unrestrained; not fluctuated.
What news on the Ryalto?
—Why, yet it lives there uncheck'd, that Anthonio bath a ship of rich lading wreck'd. Shakefp. Mer. of Venice.
Apt the mind, or fancy, is to rove
Uncheck'd, and of her roving is no end. Milton.
Thee on the wing thy uncheck'd vigour bore,
To wanton freely, or securely soar. Smith to J. Phillips.
UNCHEWED. adj. Not masticated.
He fills his famish'd maw, his mouth runs o'er
With unchew'd morsels, while he churns the gore. Dryden.
To UNCHILD. v. a. To deprive of children.
He hath widow'd and unchilded many a one,
Which to this hour bewail the injury. Shakefp.
UNCHRISTIAN. adj.
1. Contrary to the laws of christianity.
It's uncharitable, unchristian, and inhuman, to pass a peremptory sentence of condemnation upon a try'd friend, where there is any room left for a more favourable judgment. L'Estrange.
These unchristian fishers of men, are fatally caught in their own nets. South.
I could dispense with the unphilosophicalness of this their hypothesis, were it not unchristian. Norris.
2. Unconverted; infidel.
Whereupon grew a question, whether a christian soldier might herein do as the unchristian did, and wear as they wore. Hooker.
UNCHRISTIANNESS. adj. Contrary to christianity.
The unchristianness of those denials might arise from a displeasure to see me prefer my own divines before their ministers. K. Charles.
UNCIRCUMCISED. adj. Not circumcised; not a Jew.
Th' uncircumcised I smil'd grimly with disdain. Cowley.
UNCIRCUMCISION. n. f. Omission of circumcision.
God, that gives the law that a Jew shall be circumcised, thereby constitutes uncircumcision an obliquity; which, had he not given that law, had never been such. Hammond.
UNCIRCUMSCRIBED. adj. Unbounded; unlimited.
Though I, uncircumscib'd myself, retire,
And put not forth my goodness. Milton's Par. Lost.
An arbitrary prince is the matter of a non-resisting people; for where the power is uncircumscibed, the obedience ought to be unlimited. Addison.
The sovereign was flattered by a set of men into a persuasion, that the regal authority was unlimited and uncircumscib'd. Addison's Freeholder, N. 2.
UNCIRCUMSPECT. adj. Not cautious; not vigilant.
Their uncircumspect simplicity had been used, especially in matters of religion. Hayward.
UNCIRCUMSTANTIAL. adj. Unimportant. A bad word.
The like particulars, although they seem uncircumstantial, are oft set down in holy scripture. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
UNCIVIL. adj. [incivil, Fr. incivilis, Lat.] Unpolite; not agreeable to rules of elegance, or complaisance.
Your undutiful, uncivil, and uncharitable dealing in this your book, hath detected you. Whitgift.
They love me well, yet I have much to do,
To keep me from uncivil outrages. Shakefp.
My friends are so unreasonable, that they would have me be uncivil to him. Spectator, N. 475.
UNCIVILLY. adv. Unpolitely; not complaisantly.
Somewhat in it he would not have done, or desired undone, when he broke forth as desperately, as before he had done uncivilly. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
UNCIVILIZED. adj.
1. Not reclaimed from barbarity.

But

UNC

But we, brave Britons, foreign laws despis'd,
And kept unconquer'd, and unconquered:
Pierce for the liberties of wit, and bold,
We still defy'd the Romans, as of old.

2. Coarse; indecent.
Several, who have been polished in France, make use of

Tell us the Dauphin's mind. Shaksp. Hen. V.

TO UNCURL. v. a. To loose from ringlets, or convolutions.
There stands a rock; the raging billows roar
Above his head in forms; but when 'tis clear, Uncurl their ridgy backs, and at his feet appear. Dryden.
The lion's foe lies prostrate on the plain,
He heaths his paws, uncurls his angry mane;
And, pleas'd with bloodless honours of the day,
Walks over, and disdains th' inglorious prey. Dryden.
The furies sink upon their iron beds,
And snakes uncurl'd hang list'ning round their heads. Pope.

TO UNCURL. v. n. To fall from the ringlets.
My fleece of woolly hair now uncurl'd,
Even as an adder, when she doth unroll
To do some fatal execution? Shaksp. Titus Andronicus.

UNCURLED. adj. Not collected into ringlets.
Alike in feature both, and garb appear;
With honest faces, though uncurl'd hair. Dryden.
But fines, alas! frail beauty must decay;
Cur'd or uncurl'd, since locks will turn to grey;
What then remains, but well our pow'r to use,
And keep good humour still, whate'er we lose? Pope.

UNCURRENT. adj. Not current; not passing in common payment.
Your voice, like a piece of uncurrent gold, is not crack'd within the ring. Shaksp. Hamlet.

He describes the unexpectedness of his appearance. Watts.
UNEXPERIENCED. adj. Not versed; not acquainted by trial or practice.
The wisest, unexperienc'd, will be ever
Timorous and loth, with novice modesty, Irresolute, unhardy, unadvent'rous. Milton.
Long use may strengthen men against many such inconveniences, which, to unexperienc'd persons, may prove very hazardous. Wilkins's Math. Magic.
The pow'rs of Troy;
Not a raw and unexperienc'd train,
But a firm body of embattl'd men. Dryden.
These reproaches are the extravagant speeches of those unexperienc'd in the things they speak against. Tillotson.
Unexperienc'd young men, if unwarned, take one thing for another. Locke.
The smallest accident intervening, often produces such changes, that a wife man is just as much in doubt of events, as the most ignorant and unexperienc'd. Swift.
UNEXPEDIENT. adj. Inconvenient; not fit.
The like would not be unexpedient after meat, to assist and cherish nature in her first concoction, and send their minds back to study in good tune. Milton on Education.
UNEXPERT. adj. [inexpertus, Lat.] Wanting skill or knowledge.
Receive the partner of my inmost soul:
Him you will find in letters, and in laws
Not unexpert. Prior.
UNEXPLORED. adj.
1. Not searched out.
Oh! say what stranger cause, yet unexplor'd,
Could make a gentle belle reject a lord? Pope.
2. Not tried; not known.
Under thy friendly conduct will I fly,
To regions unexplor'd. Dryden.
UNEXPRESSED. adj. Not laid open to censure.
They will endeavour to diminish the honour of the best treatise, rather than suffer the little mistakes of the author to pass unexpressed. Watts's Improvement of the Mind.
UNEXPRESSIBLE. adj. Ineffable; not to be uttered.
What unexpressible comfort does overflow the pious soul, from a confidence of its own innocence. Tillotson.
UNEXPRESSIVE. adj.
1. Not having the power of uttering or expressing. This is the natural and analogical signification.
2. Inexpressible; unutterable; ineffable; not to be expressed.
Improper, and out of use.
Run, run, Orlando, carve on every tree
The fair, the chaste, and inexpressive the. Shakespeare.
With nectar pure his oozy locks he laves,
And hears the unexpressive, nuptial song.
In the blest kingdoms, meek, of joy and love. Milton.
The helmed cherubim,
And sworded seraphim,
Are seen in glittering ranks, with wings display'd,
Harping in loud and solemn quire,
With inexpressive notes to heaven's new-born heir. Milton.
UNEXTENDED. adj. Occupying no assignable space; having no dimensions.
How inconceivable is it, that a spiritual, i. e. an unextended substance, should represent to the mind an extended one, as a triangle? Locke.

UNF

UNEXTINGUISHABLE. adj. [inextinguibile, Fr.] Unquenchable; not to be put out.
Pain of unextinguishable fire
Must exercise us, without hope of end. Milton.
What native, unextinguishable beauty must be impressed through the whole, which the defecation of so many parts by a bad printer, and a worse editor, could not hinder from shining forth? Bentley.
UNEXTINGUISHED. adj. [inextinctus, Lat.]
1. Not quenched; not put out.
The souls, whom that unhappy flame invades,
Make endless moans, and, pining with desire,
Lament too late their unextinguish'd fire. Dryden.
Ev'n o'er your cold, your ever-fac'd urn,
His constant flame, shall unextinguish'd burn. Lyttleton.
2. Not extinguishable.
An ardent thirst of honour; a soul unsatisfied with all it has done, and an unextinguish'd desire of doing more. Dryden.
UNFADED. adj. Not withered.
A lovely flower,
Unfaded yet, but yet unfed below,
No more to mother earth, or the green stem shall owe. Dryd.
UNFADING. adj. Not liable to wither.
For her th' unfading rose of Eden blooms,
And wings of seraphs shed divine perfumes. Pope.
UNFAILING. adj. Certain; not missing.
Nothing the united voice of all history proclaims so loud, as the certain, unfailing curse, that has pursued and overtook sacrilege. South's Sermons.
Thou, secure of my unfailing word,
Compose thy swelling soul, and sheath the sword. Dryden.
UNFAIR. adj. Dishonest; seditious; not honest.
You come, like an unfair merchant, to charge me with being in your debt. Swift.
UNFAITHFUL. adj.
1. Perfidious; treacherous.
If you break one jot of your promise, I will think you the most atheistical break-promiser, and the most unworthy, that may be chosen out of the gross band of the unfaithful. Shakespeare.
My feet, through wine, unfaithful to their weight,
Betray'd me tumbling from a tow'ry height. Pope.
2. Impious; infidel.
Thence shall come
To judge th' unfaithful dead; but to reward
His faithful, and receive them into bliss. Milton's Par. Lost.
UNFAITHFULLY. adv. Treacherously; perfidiously.
There is danger of being unfaithfully counselled; and more for the good of them that counsel, than for him that is counselled. Bacon.
UNFAITHFULNESS. n. f. Treachery; perfidiousness.
As the obscurity of what some writers deliver, makes it very difficult to be understood; so the unfaithfulness of too many others, makes it unfit to be relied on. Boyle.
UNFALLOWED. adj. Not followed.
Th' unfallow'd glebe
Yearly o'ercomes the granaries with stores
Of golden wheat. Phillips.
UNFAMILIAR. adj. Unaccustomed; such as is not common.
The matters which we handle, seem, by reason of newness, dark, intricate, unfamiliar. Hooker, b. i.
Chaucer's uncouth, or rather unfamiliar, language, deters many readers. Warton's Spenser.
UNFASHIONABLE. adj. Not modish; not according to the reigning custom.
A man writes good sense, but he has not a happy manner of expression. Perhaps he uses obsolete and unfashionable language. Watts's Logic.
UNFASHIONABLENESS. n. f. Deviation from the mode.
Natural unfashionableness is much better than apish, affected postures. Locke.
UNFASHIONED. adj.
1. Not modified by art.
Mark but how terribly his eyes appear;
And yet there is something roughly noble there;
Which, in unfashion'd nature, looks divine,
And, like a gem, does in the quarry shine. Dryden.
2. Having no regular form.
A lifeless lump, unfashion'd and unfram'd,
Of jarring seeds, and justly chaos nam'd. Dryden.
UNFASHIONABLY. adv. [from unfashionable.]
1. Not according to the fashion.
2. Unartfully.
Deform'd, unfinish'd, sent before my time
Into this breathing world, scarce half made up;
And that so lamely and unfashionably,
That dogs bark at me. Shakespeare's Rich. III.
TO UNFASTEN. v. a. To loose; to unfix.
He had no sooner unfastened his hold, but that a wave forcibly spoiled his weaker hand of hold. Sidney, b. ii.

UNF

His foes are so enrooted with his friends,
That plucking to unfix an enemy,
He doth unfasten so, and shake a friend. Shakespeare.
Then in the key-hole turns
Th' intricate wards, and every bolt and bar
Of massy iron, or solid rock, with ease Unfastens. Milton's Par. Lost, b. ii. l. 876.
UNFATHERED. adj. Fatherless; having no father.
They do observe
Unfather'd heirs, and loathly births of nature. Shakespeare.
UNFATHOMABLE. n. f.
1. Not to be founded by a line.
In the midst of the plain a beautiful lake, which the inhabitants thereabouts pretend is unfathomable. Addison.
Beneath unfathomable depths they faint,
And secret in their gloomy caverns pant. Addison's Ovid.
2. That of which the end or extent cannot be found.
A thousand parts of our bodies may be diversified in all the dimensions of solid bodies; which overwhelms the fancy in a new abyss of unfathomable number. Bentley's Sermons.
UNFATHOMABLY. adv. So as not to be founded.
Cover'd pits, unfathomably deep. Thomson.
UNFATHOMED. adj. Not to be founded.
The Titan race
He find'd with lightning, rowl within the unfathom'd space. Dryden.
UNFATIGUED. adj. Unworn; untired.
Over dank, and dry,
They journey toilsome, unfatigued with length
Of march. Phillips.
UNFAVOURABLY. adv.
1. Unkindly; unpropitiously.
2. So as not to countenance, or support.
Bacon speaks not unfavourably of this. Glanville.
UNFEARED. adj.
1. Not affrighted; intrepid; not terrified.
Just men
Though heaven should speak with all his wrath at once,
That with his breath the hinges of the world
Did crack, we should stand upright and unfear'd. B. Johnson.
2. Not dreaded; not regarded with terror.
UNFEASIBLE. adj. Impracticable.
UNFEATHERED. adj. Implumous; naked of feathers.
The mother nightingale laments alone;
Whole nest home prying churl had found, and thence
By stealth convey'd th' unfather'd innocence. Dryden.
UNFEATURED. adj. Deformed; wanting regularity of features.
Village rough,
Deform'd, unfatur'd, and a skin of buff. Dryden.
UNFED. adj. Not supplied with food.
Each bone might through his body well be read,
And every sinew seen through his long fast;
For ought he car'd, his carcass long unfed. Fairy Queen.
A grilly foaming wolf unfed. Reverend.
UNFEED. adj. Unpaid.
It is like the breath of an unfeed lawyer; you gave me nothing for't. Shakespeare's K. Lear.
UNFEELING. adj. Insensible; void of mental sensibility.
Dull, unfeeling, barren ignorance,
Is made my goaler to attend on me. Shakespeare, Rich. II.
Unlucky Welled! thy unfeeling master,
The more thou ticklest, grips his fit the faster. Pope.
UNFEIGNED. adj. Not counterfeited; not hypocritical; real;
sincere.
Here I take the like unfeigned oath,
Never to marry her. Shakespeare's Taming of the Shrew.
Thousand decencies that daily flow
From all her words and actions, mix'd with love,
And sweet compliance, which declare unfeigned Union of mind. Milton's Par. Lost.
Sorrow unfeign'd, and humiliation meek. Milton.
Employ it in unfeigned piety towards God. Sprat.
UNFEIGNEDLY. adv. Really; sincerely; without hypocrisy.
He pardoneth all them that truly repent, and unfeignedly believe his holy gospel. Common Prayer.
How should they be unfeignedly just, whom religion doth not cause to be such; or they religious, which are not found such by the proof of their just actions? Hooker.
Prince dauphin, can you love this lady? —
— I love her most unfeignedly. Shakespeare, K. John.
Thou hast brought me and my people unfeignedly to repent of the sins we have committed. K. Charles.
UNFEELT. adj. Not felt; not perceived.
All my treasury
Is but yet unfeelt thanks, which, more enrich'd,
Shall be your love and labour's recompence. Shakespeare.
Her looks, from that time infus'd Sweetness into my heart, unfeelt before. Milton's Par. Lost.
'Tis pleasant, safely to behold from shore
The rowling ships, and hear the tempest roar;

UNF

Not that another's pain is our delight,
But pains unfelt produce the pleasing sight. Dryden.
UNFENCED. adj.
1. Naked of fortification.
I'd play incessantly upon these jades;
Even till unfenced desolation
Leave them as naked as the vulgar air. Shakespeare.
2. Not surrounded by any inclosure.
UNFERMENTED. adj. Not fermented.
All such vegetables must be unfermented; for fermentation changes their nature. Arbuthnot on Aliments.
UNFERTILE. adj. Not fruitful; not prolific.
Peace is not such a dry tree, such a tasteless, unfruitful thing, but that it might fructify and increase. Deacy of Piety.
TO UNFETTER. v. a. To unchain; to free from shackles.
Unfetter me with speed, Dryden.
I see you troubled that I bleed.
This most useful principle may be unfetter'd, and restored to its native freedom of exercise. Addison's Spectator.
The soul in these instances is not entirely loose and unfetter'd from the body. Addison's Spectator.
Th' unfetter'd mind by thee sublim'd. Thomson.
UNFIGURED. adj. Representing no animal form.
In unfigured paintings the noblest is the imitation of marbles, and of architecture, as arches, freezes. Walton.
UNFILLED. adj. Not filled; not supplied.
Come not to table, but when thy need invites thee; and if thou best in health, leave something of thy appetite unfilled. Taylor's Rule of Living Holy.
The air did not precisely fill up the vacuities of the vessel, since it left so many unfilled. Boyle.
The throne of my forefathers
Still stands unfill'd. Addison's Cato.
UNFIRM. adj.
1. Weak; feeble.
Our fancies are more giddy and unfirm
Than women's are. Shakespeare, Twelfth Night.
So is the unfirm king.
In three divided; and his coffers found
With hollow poverty and emptiness. Shakespeare.
2. Not stable.
Take the time, while stage-ring yet they stand,
With feet unfirm, and prepossess the stand. Dryden.
UNFULFILL. adj. Unfulfillable to a son.
You offer him a wrong,
Something unfulfill.
Teach the people, that to hope for heaven is a merechary, legal, and therefore unfulfill, affection. Boyle.
UNFINISHED. adj. Incomplete; not brought to an end; not brought to perfection; imperfect; wanting the last hand.
It is for that such outward ornament
Was lavish'd on their sex, that inward gifts
Were left for haste unfinish'd. Milton.
I dedicate to you a very unfinished piece. Dryden.
His hasty hand left his pictures to unfinished, that the beauty in the picture faded sooner than in the person after whom it was drawn. Spectator, N^o. 83.
This collection contains not only such pieces as come under our review, but many others, even unfinished. Swift.
UNFIT. adj.
1. Improper; unsuitable.
They easily perceive how unfit that were for the present, which was for the first age convenient enough. Hooker.
Neither can I think you would impose upon me an unfit and over-ponderous argument. Milton on Education.
2. Unqualified.
Unfit he was for any worldly thing,
And eke unable once to stir or go.
Old as I am, for ladies love unfit.
The pow'r of beauty I remember yet. Dryden.
A genius that can hardly take in the connection of three propositions, is utterly unfit for speculative studies. Watts.
TO UNFIT. v. a. To disqualify.
Those excellencies, as they qualified him for dominion, so they unfitted him for a satisfaction or acquiescence in his vassals. Government of the Tongue.
UNFITTING. adj. Not proper.
Although monosyllables, so rise in our tongue, are unfitting for verses, yet are they the most fit for expressing briefly the first conceits of the mind. Camden.
UNFITLY. adv. Not properly; not suitably.
Others, reading to the church those books which the apostles wrote, are neither untruly nor unfitly said to preach. Hooker.
The kingdom of France may be not unfitly compared to a body that hath all its blood drawn up into the arms, breast and back. Howel.
UNFITNESS. n. f.
1. Want of qualifications.
In setting down the form of common prayer, there was no need that the book should mention either the learning of a fit, or the unfitness of an ignorant minister. Hooker.

UNF

It is looked upon as a great weakness, and unfix'd for business, for a man to be so open, as really to think not only what he says, but what he swears. South.
 2. Want of propriety. South.
 To UNFIX, v. a. To loosen; to make less fast.
 1. To loosen; to make less fast.

 He doth unfasten a friend.
 Who can impress the forest, bid the tree
Unfix his earth-bound root? Shakespeare's Macbeth.
 2. To make fluid.
 Stiff with eternal ice, and hid in snow,
 The mountain stands; nor can the rising sun
Unfix her frosts, and teach them how to run. Dryden.
 UNFIXED, adj. Wandering; erratic; inconstant; vagrant.
 1. Wandering; erratic; inconstant; vagrant.
 So vast the noise, as if not fleets did join;
 But lands unfix'd, and floating nations strove. Dryden.
 Her lovely looks a sprightly mind disclose,
 Quick as her eyes, and as unfix'd as those. Pope.
 2. Not determined.
 Irresolute on which she should rely:
 At last unfix'd in all, is only fix'd to die. Dryden.
 UNFLESHED, adj. That has not yet the full furniture of feathers; young; not completed by time; not having attained full growth.
 The friends thou hast, and their adoption try'd,
 Grapple them to thy soul with hooks of steel;
 But do not dull thy palm with entertainment
 Of each new-hatch'd, unflesh'd comrade. Shakespeare.
 In those unflesh'd days was my wife a girl. Shakespeare.
Unflesh'd actors learn to laugh and cry. Dryden.
 UNFLESHED, adj. Not fleshed; not seasoned to blood; raw.
 Nature his limbs only for war made fit;
 With some less foe thy unflesh'd valour try. Cauley.
 As a generous, unflesh'd bound, that bears
 From far the hunter's horn and cheerful cry.
 So will I haste. Dryden's Cleomenes.
 UNFOLD, adj. Unfolded; not put to the work.
 The utmost powers thought themselves secure in the strength of an unfolded army of sixty thousand men, and in a revenue proportionable. Temple.
 To UNFOLD, v. a. To expand; to spread; to open.
 1. To expand; to spread; to open.
 I saw on him rising
 Out of the water, heav'n above the clouds
 Unfold her crystal doors; thence on his head
 A perfect dove descend. Paradise Regain'd.
 Invade his hissing throat, and winding spires,
 'Till stretch'd in length th' unfolded foe retires. Dryden.
 Ah, what avail!
 The vivid green his shining plumes unfold. Pope.
 Sloth unfolds her arms, and wakes;
 Lifting envy drops her snakes. Pope's St. Cecilia.

 Surprise her with discourse of my dear faith. Shakespeare.
 Helen, to you our minds we will unfold. Shakespeare.
 How comes it thus? Unfold, celestial guide! Milton.
 Things of deep sense we may in prose unfold;
 But they move more, in lofty numbers told. Keatsman.
 3. To discover; to reveal.
 Time shall unfold what plaited cunning hides,
 Who covers faults, at last with shame derides. Shakespeare.
 If the object be seen through two or more such convex or concave glasses, every glass shall make a new image, and the object shall appear in the place, and of the bigness of the last image; which consideration unfolds the theory of microscopes and telescopes. Newton's Opticks.
 4. To display; to set to view.
 We are the inhabitants of the earth, and endowed with understanding; doth it then properly belong to us, to examine and unfold the works of God? Burnet.
 UNFOLDING, adj. Directing to unfold.
 The unfolding star calls up the shepherd. Shakespeare.
 To UNFOLD, v. a. To restore from folly.
 Have you any way to unfold me again? Shakespeare.
 UNFORBID, adj. Not prohibited.
 UNFORBIDDEN, adj. If unforbid thou may'st unfold
 What we, not to explore the secrets, ask
 Of his eternal empire. Milton's Par. Lost.
 These are the unforbidden trees; and here we may let loose the reins, and indulge our thoughts. Norris.
 A good man not only forbears those gratifications, which are forbidden by reason and religion, but even refrains himself in unforbidden influences. Attarbury.

UNF

UNFORBIDDENNESS, n. f. The state of being unforbidden.
 The bravery you are so severe to, is no where expressly prohibited in scripture; and this unforbiddenness they think sufficient to evince, that the sumptuousness you condemn is not in its own nature sinful. Boyle.
 UNFORCED, adj. 1. Not compelled; not constrained.
 This gentle and unforc'd accord of Hamlet Sits smiling to my heart. Shakespeare's Hamlet.
Unforc'd by punishment, unaw'd by fear;
 His words were simple, and his soul sincere. Dryden.
 2. Not impelled.
 No more can impure man retain and move
 In that pure region of a worthy love,
 Than earthly substance can, unforc'd, aspire,
 And leave his nature to converse with fire. Dante.
 3. Not feigned.
 Upon these tidings they broke forth into such unforc'd and unfeigned passions, as it plainly appeared that good-nature did work in them. Hayward.
 4. Not violent.
 Windsor the next above the valley swells
 Into my eye, and doth itself present
 With such an easy and unforc'd ascent,
 That no stupendous precipice denies Access, no horror turns away our eyes. Denham.
 5. Not contrary to ease.
 If one arm is stretched out, the body must be somewhat bow'd on the opposite side, in a situation which is unforc'd. Dryden.
 UNFORGEABLE, adj. Wanting strength.

 ing the unfortify'd state of mankind, is a great defect. Collier.
 UNFORTUNATE, adj. Not successful; unsuccessful; wanting luck; unhappy.
 All things religiously taken in hand, are prosperously ended;
 because whether men in the end have that which religion did allow to desire, or that which it teacheth them contentedly to suffer, they are in neither event unfortunate. Hector.
 Whosoever will live altogether out of himself, and study other men's humours, shall never be unfortunate. Raleigh.
 Vindictive persons live the life of witches, who, as they are mischievous, end unfortunate. Bacon.
 He that would hunt a hare with an elephant, is not un- fortunate for missing the mark, but foolish for chusing such an unapt instrument. Taylor.
 The virgins shall on festival days
 Visit his tomb with flowers, only bewailing
 His lot unfortunate in nuptial choice,
 From whence captivity and loss of eyes. Milton's Agonistes.

UNF

UNFORTUNATELY, adv. Unhappily; without good luck.
 Unconfuting affection unfortunately born, to mewards, made Zelmene borrow too much of her natural modesty, as to leave her more decent raiments. Sidney.

Our target undented. Shakespeare. Ant. and Cleopatra.

To UNHALL'OW. v. a. To deprive of holiness; to profane; to defecate.
Perhaps the fact
Is not so heinous now, foretasted fruit;
Profan'd first by the serpent; by him first Made common, and unhallow'd, ere our taste. Milton.

The vanity unhallows the virtue. L'Estrange.

This one use left such an indelible sacredness upon them, that the impiety of the design could be no sufficient reason to unhallow and degrade them to common use. South.

UNHALL'OWED. adj. Unholy; profane.
Thy curst spirit
Govern'd a wolf, who hang'd for human slaughter:
Ev'n from the gallows did his fell soul fleet;
And while thou lay'st in thy unhallow'd dam Inus'd itself in thee. Shakespeare. Merchant of Venice.

I had not unlock'd my lips
In this unhallow'd air, but that this jugler
Would think to charm my judgment, as mine eyes,
Obtruding false rules, prank'd in reason's garb. Milton.

Nor shall presume to violate these bands,
Or touch thy person with unhallow'd hands. Dryden.

Here cease thy flight, nor with unhallow'd lays Touch the fair fame of Albion's golden days. Pope.

To stuff this maw, this vast, unhidebound corps. Milton.
TO UNHINGE. v. a.
1. To throw from the hinges.
2. To displace by violence.
For want of cement, ribs of rock disjoint'd
Without an earthquake, from their base would start,
And hills unbing'd, from their deep roots depart. Blackmore.
3. To disorder; to confuse.
Rather than not accomplish my revenge,
Just or unjust, I would the world unbinge. Waller.
If God's providence did not order it, cheats would not only juggle private men out of their rights, but unbinge states, and run all into confusion. Ray on the Creation.
UNHOLINESS. n. f. Impiety; profaneness; wickedness.
Too foul and manifest was the unholiness of obtruding upon men remission of sins for money. Raleigh.
UNHOLY. adj.
1. Profane; not hallowed.
Doth it follow that all things now in the church are unholy, which the Lord hath not himself precisely instituted? Hooker.
2. Impious; wicked.
We think not ourselves the holier, because we use it; so neither should they with whom no such thing is in use, think us therefore unholy, because we submit ourselves unto that, which, in a matter so indifferent, the wisdom of authority and law have thought comely. Hooker.
From the paradise of God,
Without remorse, drive out the sinful pair,
From hallow'd ground th' unholy. Milton's Par. Lost.
Far other dreams my erring soul employ;
Far other raptures of unholy joy. Pope.
UNHONOUR'D. adj.
1. Not regarded with veneration; not celebrated.
Unhonour'd though I am, at least, said she,
Not unreveng'd that impious act shall be. Dryden.
Pales unhonour'd, Ceres unemploy'd,
Were all forgot. Dryden.
2. Not treated with respect.
Grieved that a visitant so long shoud wait,
Unmark'd, unhonour'd, at a monarch's gate. Pope.
TO UNHOOP. v. a. To divest of hoops.
Unhoop the fair sex, and cure this fashionable tympany got among them. Addison's Spectator, No. 127.
UNHOPE'D. adj. Not expected; greater than hope had UNHOPE'D for. } promised.
With unhop'd success
Th' ambassadors return with promis'd peace. Dryden.
Heav'n has inspir'd with a sudden thought,
Whence your unhop'd-for safety may be wrought. Dryden.
UNHOPEFUL. adj. Such as leaves no room to hope.
Benedict is not the unhopefullest husband that I know; thus far I can praise him; he is of approved valour. Shakesp.
I thought the routing style I wrote in, might prove no un-hopeful way to procure somewhat considerable from those great masters of chymical arcana. Boyle.
TO UNHOARSE. v. a. To beat from an horse; to throw from the saddle.
He would unhorse the lustiest challenger. Shakespeare.
The emperor, rescued a noble gentleman, whom, unhorsed and fore wounded, the enemy was ready to have slain. Knight.
On a fourth he flies, and him unhorses too. Daniel.
They are forc'd
To quit their boats, and fare like men unhors'd. Waller.
The knights unhors'd may rise from off the plain,
And fight on foot, their honour to regain. Dryden.
UNHOSPITABLE. adj. Unhospitable; Lat.] Affording no kindness or entertainment to strangers; cruel; barbarous.
The cruel nation, covetous of prey,
Stain'd with my blood th' unhospitable coast. Dryden.
UNHUSTLE. adj. Not belonging to an enemy.
The high-prancing steeds
Spurn their dismounted riders; they expire Indignant, by unbody wounds delroy'd. Philips.

UNI

TO UNHOUSE. v. a. To drive from the habitation.
Seek true religion: O where? Mirreus!
Thinking her unhous'd here, and fled from us, Donne.
Seek her at Rome.
Death unawares with his cold, kind embrace,
Unhous'd thy virgin soul from her fair biding place. Milton.
UNHOUS'D. adj.
1. Homeless; wanting a house.
Call the creatures,
Whose naked natures live in all the spight
Of weakful heav'n; whose bare, unhous'd trunks,
To the conflicting elements expos'd,
Answer meet nature. Shakesp. Timon of Athens.
2. Having no settled habitation.
But that I love the gentle Desdemona,
I would not my unhous'd, free condition
Put into circumscription and confine. Shakesp. Othello.
Hear this,
You unhous'd, lawless, rambling libertines. Southern.
UNHOUS'ELLED. adj. Having not the sacrament.
Thus I sleeping, by a brother's hand,
Of life, of crown, of queen at once dispatch'd;
Cut off even in the blossoms of my fun,
Unhous'd, unanointed, unanell'd. Shakesp. Hamlet.
UNHUMBL'D. adj. Not humbled; not touched with shame or confusion.
Should I of these the liberty regard,
Who, freed as to their ancient patrimony,
Unhumb'd, unrepent'd, unreform'd, Headlong would follow. Milton's Par. Regain'd.
UNHURT. adj. Free from harm.
Of fifteen hundred, eight hundred were slain in the field;
and of the remaining seven hundred, two men only came off unhurt. Bacon's War with Spain.
I tread more lightly on the ground;
My nimble feet from unhurt flow'r rebound;
I walk in air. Dryden's State of Innocence.
Supported by thy care,
Through burning climes I pass'd unhurt,
And breath'd in tainted air. Addison's Spectator.
The stars shall fade away;
But thou that flourish in immortal youth,
Unhurt, amidst the war of elements,
The wrecks of matter, and the crush of worlds. Addison.
UNHURTFUL. adj. Innoxious; harmless; doing no harm.
You hope the duke will return no more, or
You imagine me too unhurtful an opposite. Shakespeare.
Flames unhurtful, hovering, dance in air. Blackmore.
UNHURTFULLY. adv. Without harm; innocently.
We laugh at others as innocently and as unhurtfully, as at ourselves. Pope to Swift.
UNICORN. n. f. [unicorns, unus and cornu, Lat.]
1. A beast, whether real or fabulous, that has only one horn.
Went thou the unicorn, pride and wrath would confound thee. Shakespeare's Timon of Athens.
Unicorns may be betray'd with trees. Shakespeare.
Bears with glasses, men with flatterers.
Nature in cornigerous animals hath placed the horns inverted upwards, as in the rhinoceros, Indian ass, and unicorn beetles. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
It is not of consequence, that because Diocorides hath made no mention of unicorns horn, there is therefore no such thing in nature. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
Some unicorns we will allow even among insects, as those nauseous beetles described by Maffettus. Brown.
Will the fierce unicorn thy voice obey,
Stand at the crib, and feed upon the hay? Sandys.
2. A bird.
Of the unicorn bird, the principal marks are these; headed and footed like the dunghill cock, tailed like a goose, horned on his forehead, with some likeness, as the unicorn is pictured;
spur'd on his wings, bigger than a swan. Grew.
UNIFORM. adj. [unus and forma.]
1. Keeping its tenour; similar to itself.
Though when confusedly mingled, as in this stratum, it may put on a face never to uniform and alike, yet it is in reality very different. Woodward.
2. Conforming to one rule; acting in the same manner; agreeing with each other.
The only doubt is about the manner of their unity, how far churches are bound to be uniform in their ceremonies, and what way they ought to take for that purpose. Hooker.
Creatures of what condition soever, though each in different manner, yet all with uniform consent, admire her, as the mother of their peace and joy. Hooker.
Numbers, being neither uniform in their designs, nor direct in their views, neither could manage nor maintain the power they got. Hooker.
UNIFORMITY. n. f. [uniformité, Fr.]
1. Resemblance to itself; even tenour.
There is no uniformity in the design of Spenser; he aims at the accomplishment of no one action. Dryden.

UNI

Queen Elizabeth was remarkable for that steadiness and uniformity which ran through all her actions. Addison.
2. Conformity to one pattern; resemblance of one to another.
The unity of that visible body and church of Christ, con-sisteth in that uniformity, which all the several persons there-unto belonging have, by reason of that one Lord, whose servants they all profess themselves; that one faith which they all acknowledge; that one baptism wherewith they are all initiated. Hooker, b. iii.
UNIFORMLY. adv. [from uniform.]
1. Without variation; in an even tenour.
That faith received from the apostles, the church, though dispersed throughout the world, doth notwithstanding keep as safe, as if it dwelt within the walls of some one house, and as uniformly hold, as if it had but one only heart and soul. Hooker, b. v.
The capillamenta of the nerves are each of them solid and uniform; and the vibrating motion of the aethereal medium may be propagated along them from one end to the other uniformly, and without interruption. Newton's Opticks.
2. Without diversity of one from another.
UNIMAGINABLE. adj. Not to be imagined by the fancy;
not to be conceived.
Things to their thought
So unimaginable, as hate in heav'n. Milton's Par. Lost.
The skilful organist plies his grave-fancied decant in lofty fugues, or the whole symphony, with artful and unimaginable touches, adorns and graces the well-studied chords of some choice composer. Milton on Education.
An infinite succession of the generations of men, without any permanent foundation, is utterly unimaginable. Tillotson.
UNIMAGINABLY. adv. To a degree not to be imagined.
Little commissures, where they adhere, may not be porous enough to be pervious to the unimaginably subtle corpuscles, that make up the beams of light. Boyle.
UNIMITABLE. adj. [inimitable, Fr. inimitabilis, Lat.] Not to be imitated.
Both these are unimitable. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.
UNIMORTAL. adj. Not immortal; mortal.
They took them several ways,
Both to destroy, or unimmortal make.
All kinds. Milton.
UNIMPAIRABLE. adv. Not liable to waste or diminution.
If the superior be unimpairable, it is a strong presumption, that the inferiors are likewise unimpaired. Hooker.
UNIMPAIRED. adj. Not diminished; not worn out.
Yet unimpair'd with labours, or with time,
Your age but seems to a new youth to climb. Dryden.
If our silver and gold diminishes, our publick credit continues unimpaired. Addison on the State of the War.

If answerable stile I can obtain
Of my celestial patroness, who deigns me
Her nightly visitation unimprov'd. Milton's Par. Lost.
UNIMPROVABLE. adj. Incapable of melioration.
UNIMPROVABLENESS. n. f. [from unimprovable.] Quality of not being improvable.
This must be imputed to their ignorance and unimprovableness in knowledge, being generally without literature. Ham.
UNIMPROV'D. adj.
1. Not made more knowing.
Not a mark went unimprov'd away. Pope.
2. Not taught; not meliorated by instruction.
Young Fortinbras,
Of unimprov'd mettle hot and full. Shakespeare. Hamlet.
Shallow, unimprov'd intellects, are confident pretenders to certainty. Glanville.
UNINCREASABLE. adj. Admitting no increase.
That love, which ought to be appropriated to God, results chiefly from an altogether, or almost unincreasable elevation and vastness of affection. Boyle.
UNINDIFFERENT. adj. Partial; leaning to a side.
His opinion touching the catholic church was as unindifferent, as touching our church, the opinion of them that favour this pretended reformation is. Hooker, b. iv.
UNINDUSTRIOUS. adj. Not diligent; not laborious.
Pride we cannot think to suggest or unindustrious an agent, as not to find out expedients for its purpose. Decay of Piety.
UNINFLAMMABLE. adj. Not capable of being set on fire.
The uninflamable spirit of such concreted, may be pretended to be but a mixture of phlegm and salt. Boyle.
UNINFLAMM'D. adj. Not set on fire.
When weak bodies come to be inflamed, they gather a much greater heat than others have uninflamed. Bacon.

UNINFORMED, adj.

1. Untaught; uninstructed.

Not uniform.Of nuptial sanctity, and marriage rites. Milton's P. Lost.
No uninformed minds can represent virtue so noble to us, that we necessarily add splendour to her. Pope.

2. Unanimated; not enlivened.

UNINGENUOUS, adj. Illiberal; disingenuous.Did men know how to distinguish between reports and certainties, this stratagem would be as unskillful, as it is un- ingenuous. *Decay of Piety.*UNINHABITABLE, adj. Unfit to be inhabited.If there be any place upon earth of that nature that paradise had, the same must be found within that supposed un- inhabitable burnt zone, or within the tropics. Raleigh.

Had not the deep been form'd, that might contain

All the collected treasures of the main;

The earth had still o'erwhelm'd with water flood,

To man an uninhabitable flood. *Blackmore.*UNINHABITABLENESS, n. f. Incapacity of being inhabited.Divers radiated opinions, such as that of the uninhabitable- ness of the torrid zone, of the solidity of the celestial part of the world, are generally grown out of request. *Boyle.*UNINHABITED, adj. Having no dwellers.The whole island is now uninhabited. Sandys.

Uninhabited, until'd, unfown

It lies, and breeds the bleating goat alone. Pope.

I cast anchor on the lee side of the island, which seemed to be uninhabited. *Gulliver's Travels.*UNINJURED, adj. Unhurt; suffering no harm.

You may as well spread out the unfur'd heaps

Of misers treasure by an outlaw's den,

And tell me it is safe; as bid me hope

Danger will let a helpless maiden pass,

Uninjur'd in this wild, surrounding waste. Milton.

Then in full age, and hoary holiness

Retire, great teacher! to thy promis'd bliss;

Untouch'd thy tomb, uninjur'd be thy dust,

As thy own fame among the future just. *Prior.*UNINSCRIBED, adj. Having no inscription.

Make sacred Charles's tomb for ever known;

Obscure the place, and uninscrib'd the stone. Pope.

Oh fact accurs!

UNINSPIRED, adj. Not having received any supernatural instruction or illumination.

Thus all the truths that men, uninspired, are enlightenedwith, came into their minds. Locke.

My pastoral muse her humble tribute brings,

And yet not wholly uninspir'd she sings. *Dryden.*UNINSTRUCTED, adj. Not taught; not helped by institution.

That fool intrudes, raw in this great affair,

And uninstructed how to stem the tide. Dryden.

It will be a prejudice to none but widows and orphans, and others uninstructed in the arts and management of moreskilful men. Locke.

It is an unspeakable blessing to be born in those parts where wisdom flourishes; though there are even in these parts, several poor, uninstructed persons. Addison.

Though we find few amongst us, who profess themselves

Anthropomorphites, yet we may find, amongst the ignorant and uninstructed christians, many of that opinion. *Locke.*UNINSTRUCTIVE, adj. Not conferring any improvement.

Were not men of abilities thus communicative, their wisdom would be in a great measure useless, and their experience uninstructive. *Addison.*UNINTELLIGENT, adj. Not knowing; not skilful; not having any consciousness.

We will give you sleepy drinks, that your senses may be unintelligent of our insufficiency. Shakesp. Winter Tale.

The visible creation is far otherwise apprehended by the philosophical enquirer, than the unintelligent vulgar. Glanville.

This conclusion, if men allow'd of, they would not destroy ill-formed productions. Ays, but these monsters. Let them be so; what will your drivelling, unintelligent, untract-able changeling be? Locke.

Why then to works of nature is assign'd

An author unintelligent and blind;When ours proceed from choice? *Blackmore.*The obvious products of unintelligent nature.UNINTELLIGIBILITY, n. f. Quality of not being intelligible.Credit the unintelligibility of this union and motion. *Glanville.*If we have truly proved the unintelligibility of it in all otherways, this argumentation is undeniable. *Burnet.*UNINTELLIGIBLE, adj. [unintelligibilis, Fr.] Not such as can be understood.

The Latin, three hundred years before Tully, was as un- intelligible in his time, as the English and French of the sameperiod are now. Swift.

Did Thetis

These arms thus labour'd for her son prepare;

For that dull soul to stare with stupid eyes,

On the learn'd unintelligible prize! Dryden.

UNI

This notion must be despised as harmless, unintelligible enthusiasm.

UNINTELLIGIBLE, adj. In a manner not to be understood.

Sound is not unintelligibly explained by a vibrating motion

1. The act of joining two or more, so as to make them one.

Adam, from whose dear side I boast me sprung,

And gladly of our union hear thee speak,

One heart, one soul in both! Milton's Par. Lost.

2. Concord; conjunction of mind or interests.

The experience of those profitable emanations from God, most commonly are the first motive of our love; but when we once have tasted his goodness, we love the spring for its own excellency, passing from considering ourselves, to an union with God. Taylor's Rule of Living Holy.

3. A pearl. Not in use.

The king shall drink to Hamlet's better breath;

And in the cup an union shall he throw,

Richer than that which four successive kings

In Denmark's crown have worn. Shakesp. Hamlet.

4. [In law.] Union is a combining or consolidation of two churches in one, which is done by the consent of the bishop, the patron, and incumbent. And this is properly called an union; but there are two other sorts, as when one church is made subject to the other, and when one man is made prelate of both,

and when a conventual is made cathedral. Touching union in the first signification, there was a statute, an. 37. Hen.

VIII. chap. 21. that it should be lawful in two churches, whereof the value of the one is not above six pounds in the king's books, of the first fruits, and not above one mile distant from the other. Union in this signification is permanent, and that is for the life of the incumbent; or real, that is, perpetual, whosoever is incumbent. *Covel.*UNIPAROUS, adj. [unus and pario, Lat.] Bringing one at a birth.

Others make good the paucity of their breed with the duration of their days, whereof there want not examples in animals uniparous. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

Sounds intermix'd with voice

Choral, or unison. *Milton's Par. Lost, b. vii.*UNISON, n. f.

1. A string that has the same sound with another.

When moved matter meets with any thing like that, from which it received its primary impress, it will in like manner move it, as in musical strings tuned unisons. Glanville.

2. A single unvaried note.

Lost was the nation's sense, nor could be found,

While a long, solemn unison went round. *Dunciad, b. iv.*UNITE, n. f. [unus, unum, Lat.] One; the least number;

or the root of numbers.

If any atom should be moved mechanically, without attraction, 'tis above a hundred million millions odds to an unit, that it would not strike upon any other atom, but glide through an empty interval without contact. *Bentley's Sermons.*Units are the integral parts of any large number. *Watts.*TO UNITE, v. a. [unitus, Lat.]

1. To join two or more into one.

The force which went in two to be dispersed,

In one alone right hand he now unites. Fairy Queen.

Whatever truths

Redeem'd from error, or from ignorance,

Thin in their authors, like rich veins of ore,

Your works unite, and still discover more. *Dryden.*A proposition for uniting both kingdoms was begun. Swift.

2. To make to agree.

The king proposed nothing more than to unite his kingdom in one form of worship. Clarendon.

3. To make to adhere.

The peritoneum, which is a dry body, may be united with the muculous flesh. Wifeman's Surgery.

And force them with a constancy, the cardinal

Cannot stand under them. Shakesp. Hen. VIII.

2. To coalesce; to be cemented; to be consolidated.

3. To grow into one.

UNITE, v. n. With union; so as to join.

The eyes, which are of a watry nature, ought to be much painted, and unitedly on their lower parts; but boldly touch'd above by the light and shadows. *Dryden's Dufresnoy.*UNITER, n. f. The person or thing that unites.Suppose an uniter of a middle constitution, that should par-take of some of the qualities of both. *Glanville's Sept.*UNITION, n. f. [unio, Fr. from unite.] The act or power of uniting; conjunction; coalition. A word proper, but little used.

As long as any different substance keeps off the union,hope not to cure a wound. *Wifeman's Surgery.*UNITIVE, adj. [from unite.] Having the power of uniting.

That can be nothing else but the unitive way of religion, which consists of the contemplation and love of God. *Norris.*UNITY, n. f. [unitas, Lat.]

1. The state of being one.

Those hereticks introduced a plurality of Gods; and so made the profession of the unity part of the symbolum, thatshould discriminate the orthodox from them. Hammond.

The production of one being the destruction of another,

although they generate, they increase not; and must not be said to multiply, who do not transcend an unity. Brown.

Man is to beget

Like of his like; his image multiply'd:

In unity defective; which requiresCollateral love, and dearest amity. Milton's Par. Lost.

Whatever we can consider as one thing, suggests to the understanding the idea of unity. Locke.

2. Concord; conjunction.

That which you hear, you'll swear

You see, there is such unity in the proofs. *Shakespeare.*We, of all christians, ought to promote unity among our-selves and others. Sprat's Sermons.

3. Agreement; uniformity.

To the avoiding of dissension, it availeth much; that there be amongst them an unity, as well in ceremonies as indoctrine. Hosker, b. iv.

4. Principle of dramattick writing, by which the tenour of the story, and propriety of representation is preserved.

The unities of time, place, and action, are exactly ob-served. Dryden's Pref. to All for Love.

UNI

Although in poetry it be absolutely necessary that the unities of time, place, and action should be thoroughly understood, there is still something more essential, that elevates and alto-nifies the fancy. Addison.

5. [In law.]

Unity of possession is a joint possession of two rights by several titles. For example, I take a lease of land from one upon a certain rent; afterwards I buy the fee-simple. This is an unity of possession, whereby the lease is extinguished;

by reason that I, who had before the occupation only for my rent, am become lord of the same, and am to pay my rent to none. *Covel.*UNJUDGED, adj. Not judicially determined

UNK

ture: very being itself does not predicate univocally touching God, and any created being, and intellect, and will, as we attribute them to him. Hale.

2. In one tenour. Thomson's Winter.

All creatures are generated univocally by parents of their own kind; there is no such thing as spontaneous generation. Ray.

UNJO'YOUS. adj. Not gay; not cheerful.

Morn late rising o'er the drooping world,
Lifts her pale eye unjoyous. Thomson's Winter.

UNJO'YST. adj. [injuste, Fr. injustus, Lat.] Iniquitous; contrary to equity; contrary to justice. It is used both of persons and things.

I should forge
Quarrels unjust against the good and loyal, Destroying them for wealth. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

The Pierces
Finding his usurpation most unjust,
Endeavour'd my advancement to the throne. Shakespeare.

He that is unjust in the least, is unjust also in much. Luke xvi.

Succeeding kings just recovery of their right, from unjust usurpations and extortions, shall never be prejudiced by any act of mine. K. Charles.

Th' unjust the just hath slain. Milton.

He who was so unjust as to do his brother an injury, will scarce be so just to condemn himself for it. Locke.

UNJUSTIFIABLE. adj. Not to be defended; not to be justified.

If these reproaches, which aim only at ostentation of wit, be so unjustifiable, what shall we say to those that are drawn, that are founded in malice? Government of the Tongue.

In a just and honourable war we engaged; not out of ambition, or any other unjustifiable motive, but for the defence of all that was dear to us. Atterbury.

If we could look into effects, we might pronounce boldly: but for a man to give his opinion of what he sees but in part, is an unjustifiable piece of rashness. Addison.

UNJUSTIFIABLENESS. n. f. The quality of not being justifiable.

He wished them to consider of the illegality of all those commissions, and of the unjustifiableness of all the proceedings which had been by virtue of them. Clarendon.

UNKE'PT. adj. Not combed. Obsolete.

Thenot, to that I chose thou dost me tempt;
But ah! too well I wot my humble vaine,
And how my rhimes been rugged and unkept. Spenser.

To UNKE'NNE. v. a.

1. To drive from his hole.

Search, seek, find out. I warrant we'll unkenel the fox.
Let me stop this way first. So, now uncape. Shakespeare.

I warrant you, colonel, we'll unkenel him. Dryden.

2. To rouse from its secrecy, or retreat.

If his occult guilt
Do not itself unkenel in one speech,
It is a damned ghost that we have seen. Shakespeare.

UNKE'NT. adj. [un and ken, to know.] Unknown. Obsolete.

Go, little book, thyself present,
As child whose parent is unkent,
To him, that is the president
Of nobleness and chivalrie. Spenser.

UNKE'PT. adj.

1. Not kept; not retained.

2. Unobserved; unobeyed.

Many things kept generally heretofore, are now in like sort generally unkept, and abolished, every where. Hooker.

UNKIND. adj. Not favourable; not benevolent.

In nature there's no blemish but the mind;
None can be call'd deform'd, but the unkind. Shakespeare.

To the noble mind
Rich gifts wax poor, when givers prove unkind. Shakespeare.

To Nimrod our author seems a little unkind; and says, that he, against right, enlarged his empire. Locke.

A real joy I never knew,
Till I believ'd thy passion true;
A real grief I ne'er can find,
Till thou prov'st perjur'd or unkind. Prior.

UNKINDLY. adj. [un and kind.]

1. Unnatural; contrary to nature.

They, with their filthiness,
Polluted this same gentle soil long time,
That their own mother loath'd their beastliness,
And 'gan abhor her brood's unkindly crime,
All were they born of her own native slime. Fairy Queen.

UNK

All works of nature,
Abortive, monstrous, or unkindly mix'd. Milton.

2. Malignant; unfavourable.

The goddess, that in rural shrine,
Dwell'd here with Pan, or Sylvan, by blest song
Forbidding every bleak, unkindly fog,
To touch the prosperous growth of this tall wood. Milton.

UNKINDLY. adv. Without kindness; without affection.

The herd, unkindly wiles,
Or chases him from thence, or from him flies. Denham.

If we unkindly part,
Will not the poor fond creature break her heart. Dryden.

UNKINDNESS. n. f. [from unkind.] Malignity; ill-will; want of affection.

Take no unkindness of his hasty words. Shakespeare.

His unkindness, that in all reason should have quench'd her love, hath, like an impediment in the current, made it more violent and unruly. Shakespeare, Measure for Measure.

After their return, the duke executed the same authority in conferring all favours, and in revenging himself upon those who had manifested any unkindness towards him. Clarendon.

Eve--As one who loves, and some unkindness meets,
With sweet, austere composure, thus reply'd. Milton.

Christ, who was the only person to have retained this unkindness, finds an extenuation of it. South's Sermons.

She sigh'd, the wept, the low'd; 'twas all the could;
And with unkindness seem'd to tax the God. Dryden.

To UNKING. v. a. To deprive of royalty.

God save king Henry, unking'd Richard says,
And send him many years of sunshine days. Shakespeare.

It takes the force of law; how then, my lord!
If as they would unking my father now,
To make you way. Southey.

UNKISS'D. adj. Not kissed.

Foul words are but foul wind, and foul wind is but foul breath, and foul breath is noisome; therefore I will depart unkiss'd. Shakespeare, Much Ado about Nothing.

UNKNIGHTLY. adj. Unbecoming a knight.

With six hours hard riding through wild places, I overgot them a little before night, near an old ill-favoured castle, the place where I perceived they meant to perform their unknightly errand. Steevens.

To UNKNIT. v. a.

1. To unweave; to separate.

Would he had continu'd to his country
As he began, and not unknit himself
The noble knot he made. Shakespeare, Coriolanus.

2. To open.

Unknit that threat'ning, unkind brow,
And dart not scornful glances from those eyes. Shakespeare.

UNKLE. v. a. [uncle, French.] The brother of a father or mother. See UNCLE.

The English power is near, led on by Malcolm,
His uncle Siward, and the good Macduff. Shakespeare.

Give me good fame, ye pow'rs! and make me just:
Thus much the rogue to publick ears will trust:
In private then--when wilt thou, mighty Jove!
My wealthy uncle from this world remove? Dryden.

To UNKNOW. v. a. To cease to know.

It's already known;
Oh! can you keep it from yourselves, unknow it? Smith.

UNKNOWABLE. adj. Not to be known.

Distinguish well between knowables and unknowables. Watts.

UNKNOWING. adj.

1. Ignorant; not knowing.

Let me speak to th' yet unknowing world,
How these things came about. Shakespeare, Hamlet.

Though unknowing persons may accuse others, yet can they never the more absolve themselves. Decay of Piety.

Unknowing I prepar'd thy bridal bed;
With empty hopes of happy issue fed. Dryden.

Unknowing he requires it; and when known,
He thinks it his; and values it, 'tis gone. Dryden.

His hounds, unknowing of his change, pursue
The chase, and their mistaken master flew. Dryden.

Proteus, mounting from the hoary deed,
Surveys his charge, unknowing of deceit. Pope.

2. Not practised; not qualified.

So Lybian huntmen, on some sandy plain,
From shady covers rouz'd, the lion chace;
The kingly beast roars out with loud disdain
And slowly moves, unknowing to give place.
These were they, whose souls the furies steel'd,
And curs'd, with hearts unknowing how to yield. Pope.

UNKNOWINGLY. adv. Ignorantly; without knowledge.

The beauty I behold has struck me dead!
Unknowingly the strikes, and kills by chance. Dryden.

They are like the Syrians, who were first smitten with blindness, and unknowingly led out of their way, into the capital of their enemy's country. Addison's Freeholder.

UNKNO'WN. adj.

1. Not known.

This is not unknown to you, Shakespeare.

How much I have disabled my estate,
Many are the trees of God, that grow
In paradise, and various, yet unknown. Milton's Paradise Lost.

To us, unknown, unseen, my easy minutes pass. Rescomen.

Here may I always on this downy grass,
Unknown, unseen, my easy minutes pass.

If any chance has hither brought the name
Of Palamedes, not unknown to fame,
Accus'd and sentenc'd for pretended crimes. Dryden.

Though incest is indeed a deadly crime,
You are not guilty, since unknown 'twas done,
And known, had been abhor'd. Dryden's Don Sebastian.

At fear of death, that saddens all
With terrors round, can reason hold her throne?
Despite the known, not tremble at th' unknown. Pope.

2. Greater than is imagined.

The planting of hemp and flax would be an unknown advantage to the kingdom. Bacon.

3. Not having cohabitation.

I am yet
Unknown to woman; never was forsworn. Shakespeare.

4. Without communication.

We stopp'd at a little inn, where the man of the house, formerly a servant in the knight's family, to do honour to his old master, had, unknown to Sir Roger, put him up in a sign-post. Addison's Spectator, N^o. 122.

UNLABOURED. adj.

1. Not produced by labour.

Unlaboured harvests shall the fields adorn,
And cluster'd grapes shall blush on ev'ry thorn. Dryden.

2. Not cultivated by labour.

Not eastern monarchs on their nuptial day,
In dazzling gold and purple thine to gay,
As the bright natives of th' unlabour'd field,
Unvers'd in spinning, and in looms unskill'd. Blackmore.

3. Spontaneous; voluntary.

Their charms, if charms they have, the truth supplies,
And from the theme unlabour'd beauties rise. Tickell.

To UNLACE. v. a.

1. To loose any thing fastened with strings.

He could not endure so cruel case,
But thought his arms to leave, and helmet to unlace. Spenser.

A little river roll'd,
By which there sat a knight with helm unlaced, Himself refreshing with the liquid cold. Fairy Queen, b. i.

The helmet from my brow unlaced. Pope's Odyssey.

2. To loose a lady's dress.

Can I forget, when they in prison placing her,
With swelling heart, in spite, and due disdainfulness,
She lay for dead, till I help'd with unlacing her. Sidney.

Unlace yourself, for that harmonious chime
Tells me from you that now it is bed-time. Donne.

3. To make loose; to put in danger of being lost.

You unlace your reputation,
And spend your rich opinion for the name of a night-brawler. Shakespeare's Othello.

To UNLACE. v. a.

1. To remove from the vessel which carries.

He's a foolish seaman,
That, when his ship is sinking, will not Unlade his hopes into another bottom. Denham.

2. To exonerate that which carries.

The vent'rous merchant, who design'd for far,
And touches on our hospitable shore,
Charm'd with the splendour of this northern star,
Shall here unlade him, and depart no more. Dryden.

3. To put out. Used of a vessel.

We landed at Tyre; for there the ship was to unlade her burden. Acts xxi. 3.

UNLAD. adj.

1. Not placed; not fixed.

Whatever we do behold now in this present world, it was unwrapped within the bowels of divine mercy, written in the book of eternal wisdom, and held in the hands of omnipotent power, the first foundations of the world being as yet unlaid. Hooker, b. v.

2. Not pacified; not filled.

No evil thing that walks by night,
Blue, meagre hag, or stubborn unlaid ghost,
Hath hurtful pow'r o'er true virginity. Milton.

UNLAMENTED. adj. Not deplored.

After six years spent in outward opulency, and inward murmur that it was not greater, he died unlamented by any. Clarendon.

Thus unlamented pass the proud away,
The pride of fools, and pageant of a day. Pope.

UNL

To UNLATCH. v. a. To open by lifting up the latch.

My worthy wife
The door unlatch'd; and, with repeated calls, Invites her former lord within my walls. Dryden.

UNLAWFUL. adj. Contrary to law; not permitted by the law.

Before I be convict by course of law,
To threaten me with death is most unlawful. Shakespeare.

It is an unlawful thing for a Jew to come unto one of another nation. Acts x. 28.

Shew me when it is our duty, and when unlawful to take these courses, by some general rule of a perpetual, never-failing truth. South.

The secret ceremonies I conceal,
Uncouth, perhaps, unlawful to reveal. Dryden.

UNLAWFULLY. adv.

1. In a manner contrary to law or right.

He that gains all that he can lawfully this year, next year will be tempted to gain something unlawfully. Taylor.

2. Illegitimately; not by marriage.

I had rather my brother die by the law, than my son should be unlawfully born. Shakespeare.

Give me your opinion, what part I, being unlawfully born, may claim of the man's affection, who begot me. Addison.

UNLAWFULNESS. n. f. Contrariety to law; state of being not permitted.

If those alledged testimonies of scripture did indeed concern the matter to such effect as was pretended, that which they should infer were unlawfulness. Hooker.

The original reason of the unlawfulness of lying is, that it carries with it an act of injustice, and a violation of the right of him, to whom we were obliged to signify our minds. South's Sermons.

To UNLEARN. v. a. To forget, or disuse what has been learned.

Antisthenes, being asked of one, what learning was most necessary for man's life? answered, to unlearn that which is naught. Bacon.

This were to imply, that all books in being should be destroyed; and that all the age should take new pains to unlearn those habits which have cost them so much labour. Holder.

The government of the tongue is a piece of morality which sober nature dictates, which yet our greatest scholars have unlearn'd. Decay of Piety.

Some cyders have by art, or age, unlearn'd
Their genuine relish, and of fundry wines Affin'd the flavour. Philips.

What they thus learned from him in one way, they did not unlearn again in another. Atterbury.

A wicked man is not only obliged to learn to do well, but unlearn his former life. Rogers's Sermons.

UNLEARNED. adj.

1. Ignorant; not informed; not instructed.

This selected piece, which you translate,
Foretells your studies may communicate,
From darker dialect of a strange land,
Wisdom that here th' unlearn'd shall understand. D'Avenant.

And by succession of unlearned times,
As bards began, so monks rung on the chimes. Rescomen.

Some at the bar, with subtilty defend
The cause of an unlearned, noble friend. Dryden.

Though unlearned men well enough understood the words white and black, yet there were philosophers found, who had subtilty enough to prove that white was black. Locke.

2. Not gained by study; not known.

Mere words, or such things chiefly as were better unlearned. Milton on Education.

3. Not suitable to a learned man.

I will prove those verses to be very unlearned, neither favouring of poetry, wit, or invention. Shakespeare.

UNLEARNEDLY. adv. Ignorantly; grossly.

He, in his epistle, plainly affirmeth, they think unlearnedly, who are of another belief. Brown's Vulg. Errors.

UNLEAVENED. adj. Not fermented; not mixed with fermenting matter.

They baked unleavened cakes of the dough, for it was not leavened. Exod. ii. 39.

Purge out therefore the old leaven, that ye may be a new lump, as ye are unleavened. 1 Cor. v. 7.

UNLEAVENEDNESS. n. f. Business; want of time; want of leisure. Not in use.

My essay touching the scripture having been written partly in England, partly in another kingdom, it were strange if there did not appear much unevenness, and if it did not betray the unleavenedness of the wandering author. Boyle.

UNLESS. conjunct. Except; if not; supposing that not.

Let us not say, we keep the commandments of the one, when we break the commandments of the other: for, unless we observe both, we obey neither. Hooker.

Unless I look on Sylvia in the day,
There is no day for me to look upon. Shakespeare.

U N L

What hidden strength,
Unle's the strength of heav'n, if you mean that. Milton.
 For sure I am, unle's I win in arms,
 To stand excluded from Emilia's charms;
 Nor can my strength avail, unle's by thee,
 Endu'd with force, I gain the victory. Dryden.
 The commendation of adversaries is the greatest triumph of a writer, because it never comes unle's extorted. Dryden.
 No poet ever sweetly sung,
Unle's he were, like Phœbus, young;
 Nor ever nymph inspir'd to rhyme,
Unle's, like Venus, in her prime. Swift.
UNLE'SONED, adj. Not taught.
 The full sum of me
 Is an unle'son'd girl, unchool'd, unpractis'd;
 Happy in this, she is not yet so old
 But she may learn. Shakespeare.
UNLETTERED, adj. Unlearned; untaught.
 When the apostles of our Lord were ordained to alter the laws of heathenish religion, St. Paul excepted, the rest were unchool'd and unlettered men. Hooker, b. iv.
 Such as the jocund flute, or gamefome pipe
 Stirs up among the loose, unletter'd hinds,
 Who thank the gods amiss. Milton.
 Th' unletter'd christian, who believes in grofs, Plods on to heav'n, and ne'er is at a loss. Dryden.
UNLEVELED, adj. Not cut even.
 All unleveled of the gay garden lies. Tickell.
UNLIBIDINOUS, adj. Not lustful.
 In those hearts
 Love unlibidinous reign'd; nor jealousy
 Was understood, the injur'd lover's hell. Milton.
UNLICENCED, adj. Having no regular permission.
 Ask what boldness brought him hither Unlicens'd. Milton's Par. Lost, b. iv.
 Warn the thoughtless, self-confiding train,
 No more, unlicens'd, thus to brave the main. Pope.
UNLICKED, adj. Shapeless; not formed: from the opinion that the bear licks her young to shape.
 Shape my legs of an unequal size,
 To disproportion me in every part,
 Like to a chaos, or unlick'd bear-whelp. Shakespeare.
 Those unlick'd bear-whelps. Donne.
 The bloody bear, an independent beast,
Unlick'd to form, in groans her hate exprest. Dryden.
UNLIGHTED, adj. Not kindled; not set on fire.
 There lay a log unlighted on the earth:
 For th' unborn chief the fatal fifters came,
 And rais'd it up, and toid it on the flame. Dryden.
 The sacred wood, which on the altar lays Untouch'd, unlighted glows. Prior.
UNLIGHTSOME, adj. Dark; gloomy; wanting light.
 A mighty sphere! he fram'd, unlightsome first,
 Though of ethereal mould. Milton's Par. Lost.
UNLIKE, adj.
 1. Dissimilar; having no resemblance.
 Where eates are to unlike as theirs and ours, I see not how that which they did, should induce, much less unlike us to the same practice. Hooker, b. v.
 So the twins humours, in our Terence, are Unlike; this harsh and rude, that smooth and fair. Denham.
Unlike the niceness of our modern dames;
 Affected nymphs, with new affected names. Dryden.
 Our ideas, whilst we are awake, succeed one another, not much unlike the images in the inside of a lantern. Locke.
 Some she disgrac'd, and some with honours crown'd;
Unlike successles equal merits found. Pope.
 2. Improbable; unlikely; not likely.
 Make not impossible that which but seems unlike. Shakespeare.
 What befel the empire of Almaine were not unlike to befall to Spain, if it should break. Bacon.
UNLIKELIHOOD, s. [from unlikely.] Improbability.
UNLIKELINESS, s.
 The work was carried on, amidst all the unlikelihooods and discouraging circumstances imaginable; the builders holding the sword in one hand, to defend the trowel working with the other. South's Sermons.
 There are degrees herein, from the very neighbourhood of demonstration, quite down to improbability and unlikeliness, even to the confines of impossibility. Locke.
UNLIKELY, adj.
 1. Improbable; not such as can be reasonably expected.
 Suspicion Mopia; for a very unlikely envy the hath stumbled upon. Sidney.
 2. Not promising any particular event.
 My advice and actions both have met Success in things unlikely. Denham's Sophy.
 This collection we thought not only unlikely to reach the future, but unworthy of the present age. Swift.
 Effects are miraculous and strange, when they grow by un- likely means. Hooker.

U N L

UNLIKELY, adv. Improbably.
 The pleasures we are to enjoy in that conversation, not unlikely may proceed from the discoveries each shall communicate to another, of God and nature. Pope.
UNLIKENESS, n. s. Diffimilitude; want of resemblance.
 Imitation pleases, because it affords matter for enquiring into the truth or fallhood of imitation, by comparing its likeness, or unlikeness with the original. Dryden.
UNLIMITABLE, adj. Admitting no bounds.
 He tells us 'tis unlimited and unlimited. Locke.
UNLIMITED, adj.
 1. Having no bounds; having no limits.
 So unlimited is our impotence to recompence or repay
 God's dilection, that it fetters our very wishes. Boyle.
 It is some pleasure to a finite understanding, to view un- limited excellencies, which have no bounds, though it cannot comprehend them. Tillotson.
 2. Undefined; not bounded by proper exceptions.
 With grofs and popular capacities, nothing does more prevail than unlimited generalities, because of their plainness at the first sight; nothing less, with men of exact judgment, because such rules are not safe to be trusted over far. Hooker.
 3. Unconfined; not restrained.
 All the evils that can proceed from an untied tongue, and an unguarded, unlimited will, we put upon the accounts of drunkenness. Taylor.
 Ascribe not unto God such an unlimited exercise of mercy, as may destroy his justice. Rogers's Sermons.
 Husbands are countelless not to trust too much to their wives owning the doctrine of unlimited conjugal fidelity. At.
UNLIMITEDLY, adv. Boundlessly; without bounds.
 Many ascribe too unlimitedly to the force of a good meaning, to think that it is able to bear the stress of whatever commissions they shall lay upon it. Decay of Piety.
UNLINEAL, adj. Not coming in the order of succession.
 They put a barren scepter in my gripe,
 Thence to be wrench'd with an unlineal hand,
 No son of mine succeeding. Shakespeare, Macbeth.
UNLINEAR, v. a. To untwist; to open.
 About his neck
 A green and gilded snake had wreath'd it self;
 Who with her head, nimble in threats, approach'd
 The opening of his mouth; but suddenly un- lineal Orlando, it unlineal it self. Shakespeare.
UNLIQUIFIED, adj. Unmelted; undissolved.
 These huge, unwieldy lumps remained in the melted matter, rigid and unliquified, floating in it like cakes of ice in a river. Addison's Remarks on Italy.
UNLOAD, v. a.
 1. To disburden; to exonerate.
 Like an ass, whole back with ingots bows,
 Thou bear'st thy heavy riches but a journey,
 And death unloads thee. Shakespeare, Measure for Measure.
 Vain man forbear, of cares unload thy mind;
 Forget thy hopes, and give thy fears to wind. Creech.
 Some to unload the fertile branches run. Pope.
 2. To put off any thing burdensome.
 To you duke Humphry must unload his grief. Shakespeare.
 Nor can my tongue unload my heart's great burthen, Shak.
UNLOAD, v. a.
 1. To open what is shut with a lock.
 I have seen her unlock her closet, take forth paper. Shakespeare.
 She springs a light,
Unlocks the door, and cutting out of breath,
 The dying saw, and instruments of death. Dryden.
 2. To open in general.
 My purer, my person, my extremest means,
 Lie all unlock'd to your occasions. Shakespeare, Measure for Measure.
 I had not thought to have unlock'd my lips
 In this unallow'd air, but that this jugler
 Would think to charm my judgment, as mine eyes,
 Obtruding false rules, pranc'd in reason's garb. Milton.
 I yielded, and unlock'd her all my heart,
 Who with a grain of manhood well resolv'd,
 Might easily have shook off all her snares. Milton.
 Sand is an advantage to cold clays, in that it warns them,
 and unlocks their binding qualities. Mortimer's Husbandry.
 A luvium of quick-lime unlocks the salts that are entangled in the viscid juices of some scorbatic persons. Arbutnot.
 Thy forests, Windor! and thy green retreats Invite my lays. Be present, sylvan maids!
Unlock your springs, and open all your shades. Pope.
UNLOCKED, adj. Not fastened with a lock.
UNLOCKED, adj. Unexpected; not foreseen.
 Yet perhaps had their number prevail'd, if the king of Pontus had not come unlock'd for to their succour. Sidney.
 How much unlock'd for is this expedition! Shakespeare.
 God! I pray him
 That none of you may live your natural age,
 But by some unlock'd accident cut off. Shakespeare.
 Whatsoever

U N L

Whatsoever is new is unlook'd for; and ever it mends some,
 and pares others. Bacon.
 From that high hope, to what relapse
Unlook'd for are we fall'n. Paradise Regain'd.
 Your affairs I have recommended to the king, but with an-look'd success. Denham.
 Nor fame I slight, nor for her favours call;
 She comes unlook'd for, if she comes at all. Pope.
UNLOOKABLE, adj. [A word rarely used.] Not to be looked.
 Whatever may be said of the unlookable mobility of atoms, yet divers parts of matter may compose bodies, that need no other cement to unite them, than the juxta-position, and resting together of their parts, whereby the air, and other fluids that might dissipate them, are excluded. Boyle.
TO UNLOOK, v. a. To loose. A word perhaps barbarous and ungrammatical, the particle prefixed implying negation;
 so that to unlook, is properly to bind.
 York, unlook your long imprison'd thoughts,
 And let thy tongue be equal with thy heart. Shakespeare.
 The weak, wanton Cupid,
 Shall from your neck unlook his am'rous fold;
 And, like a dew-drop from the lion's mane,
 Be shook to air. Shakespeare, Troilus and Cressida.
 Turn him to any cause of policy;
 The gordian knot of it he will unlook,
 Familiar as his garter. Shakespeare, Hen. V.
 It asked in you,
 'T' unlook this tied-up justice, when you pleas'd. Shakespeare.
 The latchet of his shoes I am not worthy to stoop down and unlook. Mark i. 7.
 He that should spend all his time in tying intricate knots, only to baffle the industry of those that should attempt to unlook them, would be thought not much to have served his generation. Decay of Piety.
TO UNLOOK, v. n. To fall in pieces; to lose all union and connexion.
 Without this virtue, the publick union must unlook; the strength decay; and the pleasure grow faint. Collier.
UNLOVED, adj. Not loved.
 As love does not always reflect itself, Zelmane, though reason there was to love Palladius, yet could not ever persuade her heart to yield with that pain to Palladius, as they feel, that feel unloved love. Sidney, b. ii.
 What though I be not fortunate;
 But miserable most to love unloved!
 He was generally unloved, as a proud and supercilious person. Clarendon, b. viii.
UNLOVELINESS, n. s. Unamiableness; inability to create love.
 The old man, growing only in age and affection, followed his suit with all means of unhoneft servants, large promises, and each thing else that might help to countervail his own unloveliness. Sidney, b. ii.
UNLOVELY, adj. That cannot excite love. There seems by this word generally more intended than barely negation. See UNLOVELINESS.
UNLOVING, adj. Unkind; not fond.
 Thou, blest with a goodly son,
 Didst yield content to disinherit him;
 Which argu'd thee a most unloving father. Shakespeare.
UNLUCKILY, adv. Unfortunately; by ill luck.
 Things have fallen out to unluckily,
 That we have had no time to move our daughter. Shakespeare.
 An ant dropt unluckily into the water. L'Estrange.
 A fox unluckily crossing the road, drew off a considerable detachment. Addison's Freeholder, N° 3.
UNLUCKY, adj.
 1. Unfortunate; producing unhappiness. This word is generally used of accidents slightly vexatious.
 You may make an experiment often, without meeting with any of those unlucky accidents which make such experiments mischance. Boyle.
 2. Unhappy; miserable; subject to frequent misfortunes.
 Then shall I you recount a rueful case,
 Said he; the which with this unlucky eye
 I late beheld. Fairy Queen, b. i.
 3. Slightly mischievous; mischievously waggish.
 His friendship is counterfeit, seldom to trust;
 His doings unlucky, and ever unjust. Tusser.
 Why, cries an unlucky wag, a less bag might have served. L'Estrange.
 A lad, th' unluckiest of his crew,
 Was still contriving something bad, but new. King.
 4. Ill-omen'd; inauspicious.
 When I appear, see you avoid the place,
 And haunt me not with that unlucky face. Dryden.
UNLUSTRIOUS, adj. Wanting splendour; wanting lustre.
 Should I join gipses with hands
 Made hard with hourly fallhood, as with labour;
 Then glad myself with peeping in an eye,
 Bate and unlustrous as the smoky light
 That's fed with stinking tallow. Shakespeare.

U N M

TO UNLU'VE, v. a. To separate vessels clos'd with chymical cement.
 Our antimony thus handled, affordeth us an ounce of ful-

My son Onesimus I have begotten in my bonds; which in time past was to thee unprofitable, but now profitable to thee and me. Philemon xi.
They receive aliment sufficient, and yet no more than they can well digest; and withal sweat out the coarsest and unprofitablest juice. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
It is better to fall honourably, than to survive in an unprofitable and unglorious life. L'Estrange.
Then they who brothers better claim disown,
Defraud their clients, and to lucre fold,
Sit brooding on unprofitable gold. Dryden.
With shame and sorrow fill'd,
For plotting an unprofitable crime.
An ox that waits the coming blow,
Old and unprofitable to the plough. Dryden.
With tears so tender,
As any heart, but only her's, could move;
Trembling before her bolted doors he stood,
And there pour'd out th' unprofitable blood. Dryden.
UNPROSONED. adj. Set free from confinement.
Several desires led parts away,
Water declin'd with earth, the air did fly;
Fire rose, and each from other but untid'd,
Themselves unproson'd were, and purify'd. Donne.

that you can but leave us where you find us; but if you succeed, you increase the number of your party. Addison.
UNPROFITABLY. adv. Uselessly; without advantage.
I shou'd not now unprofitably spend Myself in words, or catch at empty hope,
By airy ways, for solid certainties.
Our country's cause,
That drew our swords, now wreaths 'em from our hands,
And bids us not delight in Roman blood
Unprofitably shed. Addison's Cato.
UNPROFITED. adj. Having no gain.
Be clamorous, and leap all civil bounds,
Rather than make unprofit return. Shakespeare.
UNPROFITICK. adv. Barren; not productive.
Great rains drown many insects, and render their eggs unprofitick, or destroy them. Hale.
UNPROMISING. adj. Giving no promise of excellence; having no appearance of value.
If he be naturally listless and dreaming, this unpromising disposition is none of the easiest to be dealt with.
An attempt as difficult and unpromising of success, as if he should make the essay, to produce some new kinds of animals out of such senseless materials. Bentley.
UNPRONOUNCED. adj. Not uttered; not spoken.
Mad th' imperfect words, with childish trips,
Half-pronounc'd, slide through my infant lips. Milton.

the king. Clarendon.
Nought unprosperous shall thy ways attend,
Born with good omens, and with heav'n thy friend. Pope.
UNPROSPEROUSLY. adv. Unsuccessfully.
When a prince fights justly, and yet unprosperously, if he could see all those reasons for which God hath so ordered it, he would think it the most reasonable thing in the world. Taylor.
UNPROTECTED. adj. Not protected; not supported.
By woeful experience, thy both did learn, that to forsake the true God of heaven, is to fall into all such evils upon the face of the earth, as men, either destitute of grace divine, may commit, or unprotected from above, endure. Hooker.
UNPROVED. adj. Not evinced by arguments.
The land,
In antique times was savage wilderness,
Unpeopled, unmanur'd, unproved, unprais'd. Spenser.
There I found a fresh, unproved knight,
Whose manly hands, imbrued in guilty blood,
Had never been. Fairy Queen, b. i.
There is much of what should be demonstrated, left unproved by those chymical experiments. Boyle.
UNPROVIDE. v. a. To divest of resolution or qualifications.
I'll not expostulate with her, lest
Her beauty unprovide my mind again. Shakespeare. Othello.
Prosperity inviting every sense,
With various arts to unprovide my mind;
What but a Spartan spirit can sustain
The shock of such temptations? Southern.
UNPROVIDED. adj.
1. Not secured or qualified by previous measures.
Where shall I find one that can steal well? O, for a fine thief of two and twenty, or thereabout; I am heinously unprovided. Shakespeare. Hen. IV.
With his prepared sword he charges home
My unprovided body, lanc'd my arm. Shakespeare.
Tears, for a stroke foreseen, afford relief;
But unprovided for a sudden blow,
Like Niobe we marble grow,
And petrify with grief. Dryden.
2. Not furnished.
Those unprovided of tackling and victual, are forced to sea. K. Charles.
The tedious had neither weapons, order, nor counsel; but

Unpurchas'd plenty our full tables loads,
And part of what they lent, return'd our gods. Denham.
UNPURGED. adj. Not purged.
Is Brutus sick?
And will he steal out of his wholesome bed,
To tempt the rheumy and unpurg'd air,
To add unto his sickness? Shakespeare. Julius Caesar.
UNPURPOSED. adj. Not designed.
Do it
Or thy precedent services are all
But accidents unpurpos'd. Shakespeare. Ant. and Cleopatra.
UNPULICK. adj. Private; not generally known.
Virgins must be retired and unpulick; for all freedom of society is a violence done to virginity, not in its natural, but in its moral capacity; that is, it looses part of its severity and strictness, by publishing that person, whose work is religious, whose thoughts must dwell in heaven. Taylor.

UNQ

UNPUBLISHED. adj.
1. Secret; unknown.
All blest secrets;
All you unpublish'd virtues of the earth,
Spring with my tears. Shakespeare. K. Lear.

I was amazed to see the unquenchableness of this fire. Flahewill.
UNQUESTIONABLE. adj.
1. Indubitable; not to be doubted.
The duke's carriage was surely noble throughout; of unquestionable courage in himself, and rather fearful of fame than danger. Wotton.
One reason that mathematical demonstrations are uncon-troverted, is because interest hath no place in those unquestionable verities. Glanville's Scept.
There is an unquestionable magnificence in every part of Paradise Lost. Addison.
2. Such as cannot bear to be questioned without impatience;
this seems to be the meaning here.
What were his marks? —
—A lean cheek, which you have not; an unquestionable spirit, which you have not. Shakespeare.
UNQUESTIONABLY. adv. Indubitably; without doubt.
If the fathers were unquestionably of the household of faith, and all to do good to them; then certainly their children cannot be strangers in this household. Sprat.
St. Austin was unquestionably a man of parts, but interposing in a controversy where his talent did not lie, shewed his zeal against the antipodes to very ill purpose. Burnet.
UNQUESTIONED. adj.

What noise? that spirit's posses'd with haste,
That wounds th' unresisting postern with these strokes. Shaksp.
The sheep was sacrific'd on no pretence,
But meek and unresisting innocence: Dryden.
A patient, useful creature.
Since the planets move horizontally through the liquid and unresisting spaces of the heav'ns, where no bodies at all, or inconsiderable ones, occur, they may preserve the same velocity which the first impulse impress'd. Bentley's Sermons.
UNRESOLVABLE. adj. Not to be solved; insoluble.
For a man to run headlong, while his ruin stares him in the face; still to press on to the embraces of sin, is a problem unresolvable upon any other ground, but that sin insinuates before it destroys. South's Sermons.
UNRESOLVED. adj.
1. Not determined; having made no resolution.
On the western coast
Rideth a puissant navy: to our shores
Throng many doubtful, hollow-hearted friends.
Unarm'd, and unresolved to beat them back. Shaksp.
Turnus, unresolved of fight,
Moves tardy back, and just recedes from fight. Dryden.

I do not so magnify this method, to think it will perfectly clear every hard place, and leave no doubt unresolved. Locke.
UNRESOLVING. adj. Not resolving.
She her aims about her unresolving husband threw. Dryd.
UNRESPECTIVE. adj. Inattentive; taking little notice.
I will converse with iron-witted fools,
And unrespective boys; none are for me
That look into me with confid'rate eyes. Shaksp.
UNREST. n. f. Disquiet; want of tranquillity; inquietude.
Wife behest, those creeping flames by reason to subdue,
Before their rage grew to so great unrest. Fairy Queen.
Repose, sweet gold, for their unrest,
That have their aims out of the emper's chest. Shaksp.
Dismay'd confusion all possess'd;
Th' afflicted troop, hearing their plot decry'd:
Then runs amaz'd distress, with sad unrest.
To this, to that; to fly, to stand, to hide.
Silence, in truth, would speak my sorrows best;
For deep sleep wounds, can least their feelings tell;
Yet, let me borrow from mine own unrest,
But time to bid him, whom I lov'd, farewell. Wilton.
Up they rose,
As from unrest; and each the other viewing,
Soon found their eyes how open'd, and their minds
How darken'd! Milton's Par. Lost, b. ix.
UNRESTORED. adj.

My tender age, in luxury was train'd,
With idle ease, and pageants entertain'd,
My hours my own, my pleasures unrestrain'd. Dryden.
2. Licentious; loose.
The taverns he daily doth frequent,
With unrestrained, loose companions. Shaksp.
3. Not limited.
Were there in this aphorism an unrestrained truth, yet were it not reasonable to infer from a caution, a non-usage, or abolition. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
UNRETRACTED. adj. Not revoked; not recalled.
The penitence of the criminal may have numbered him amongst the saints, when our unretracted uncharitableness may lend us to unquenchable flames. Govern. of the Tongue.
Nothing but plain malevolence can justify diuision. Malevolence shewn in a single, outward act, unretracted, or in habitual ill-nature. Collier on Friendship.
UNREVEALED. adj. Not told; not discovered.
Had ye once seen these her celestial treasures,
And unrevealed pleasures, Shaksp.
Then would ye wonder, and her praises sing.
Dear, fatal name! rest ever unrevealed. Pope.
Nor pass these lips, in holy silence seal'd.
UNREVENGED. adj. Not revenged.
So might we die, not envying them that live;
So would we die, not unrevenge'd all. Pope.
Unhonour'd though I am,
Not unrevenge'd that impious act shall be. Dryden.
Great Pompey's shade complains that we are slow,
And Scipio's ghost walks unrevenge'd amongst us. Shaksp.
UNREVERENT. adj. Irreverent; disrespectful.
See not your bride in these unreverent robes. Shaksp.
Fie! unreverend tongue! to call her bad,
Whose sovereignty to oft thou hast prefer'd,
With twenty thousand soul-confuming oaths. Shaksp.
UNRIDDLED. v. a. To solve an enigma; to explain a problem.
Some kind power unriddle where it lies,
Whether my heart be faulty, or her eyes!
The Platonic principles will not unriddle the doubt. Glavin.
A reverse often clears up the passage of an old poet, as the poet often serves to unriddle the reverse. Addison.
UNRIDICULOUS. adj. Not ridiculous.
If an indifferent and unridiculous object could draw this au-stereous unto a smile, he hardly could with perpetuity resist proper motives thereof. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

Rhodes is the sovereign of the sea no more;
Their ships unrigg'd, and spent their naval store. Dryden.
UNRIGHT. Wrong. In Spenser, this word should perhaps be unright.
What in most English writers useth to be loose, and as it were unright, in this author is well grounded, timely framed, and strongly trussed up together. Glavin to Spenser's Kal.
Shew that thy judgment is not unright. Wisd. xii.
UNRIGHTOUS. adj. Unjust; wicked; sinful; bad.
Octavius here leapt into his room,
And it usurped by unrighteous doom;
But he his title justify'd by might. Fairy Queen, b. ii.
Within a month!
Ere yet the salt of most unrighteous tears,
Had left the fluffing in her galled eyes,
She married.—Oh most wicked speed!
Let the wicked man forsake his way, and the unrighteous man his thoughts, and let him return unto the Lord. Ia. lv.
UNRIGHTEOUSLY. adv. Unjustly; wickedly; sinfully.
For them
Their foes a deadly Shibboleth devise:
By which unrighteously it was decry'd,
That none to trust, or profit should succeed,
Who would not swallow first a poisonous wicked weed. Dryd.
A man may fall undeserv'dly under publick disgrace, or is unrighteously oppressed. Collier on Pride.
UNRIGHTOUSNESS. n. f. Wickedness; injustice.
Our Romanists can no more abide this proposition converted, than themselves. All sin, say they, is a transgression of the law; but every transgression of the law is not sin.
The apostle, therefore, turns it for us: all unrighteousness, says he, is sin; but every transgression of the law is unrighteousness, faith Austin upon this place. Hall.
Some things have a natural deformity in them, as perjury, perfidiousness, unrighteousness, and ingratitude. Tillotson.

Be forc'd to impeach a broken hedge,
And pigs unring'd at vil. franc. pledge. Hudibras.
UNRIPE. v. a. [This word is improper; there being no difference between ripe and unripe; and the negative particle is therefore of no force; yet it is well authorized.] To cut open.
Like a traitor
Didst break that vow, and, with thy treach'rous blade, Unrip'd the bowels of thy sov'reign's son. Shaksp.
He could not now, with his honour, to unripe, and put a lie upon all that he had said and done before, as to deliver him up. Bacon's Hen. VII.
We are angry with searchers, when they break open trunks, and unripe packs, and open sealed letters. Taylor.
Cato well observes, that friendship ought not to be unripp'd, but unfitted. Collier.

But fall unshaken when they mellow be. Shaksp.
In this northern tract our hoarse throats,
Utter unripe, and ill-contracted notes. Waller.

He fix'd his unripe vengeance to defer, I blood Sought not the garden, but retir'd unseen, Dryden.
To brood in secret on his gather'd spleen.
2. Too early.
Who hath not heard of the valiant, wife, and just Dori-laus, whose unripe death doth yet, so many years since, draw tears from virtuous eyes? Sidney, b. ii.
UNRIPE. adj. Not matured.
Were you with these, you'd soon forget
The pale, unripe beauties of the north. Addison's Cato.
UNRIPE. n. f. Immaturity; want of ripeness.
The ripeness, or unripeness, of the occasion, must ever be well weighed; and generally it is good to commit the beginnings of all great actions to Argus, with his hundred eyes;
and the ends to Briareus, with his hundred hands. Bacon.
UNRIVALLED. adj.
1. Having no competitor.
Honour forbid! at whose unrivall'd thrines,
Ease, pleasure, virtue, all our sex resign. Pope.
2. Having no peer or equal.

ness; licentiousness.
By the negligence of some who were hardly to be commanded, and by the unruliness of others, who without leave were gone a-shore, so fair an occasion of victory was neglected. Knol.
No care was had to curb the unruliness of anger, or the exorbitance of desire. Amongst all their sacrifices, they never sacrificed so much as one lust. South's Sermons.
UNRULY. adj. Turbulent; ungovernable; licentious; tumultuous.
In sacred bands of wedlock ty'd
To Theron, a loose unruly swain;
Who had more joy to range the forest wide,
And chace the savage beast with bulky pain. Fairy Queen.
Down I come, like glitt'ring Phaeton,
Wanting the manage of an unruly jade. Shaksp. Rich. II.
The best and foundest of his time hath been but rash;
then must we look from his age, to receive but unruly waywardness. Shaksp. K. Lear.
The tongue is an unruly evil, full of deadly poison. Ia. iii.
Thou dost a better life, and nobler vigour give;
Dost each unruly appetite controul. Roscommon.

Love

UNS

Love insults, disguised in the cloud,
And welcome force of that unuly crowd.
Passions kept their place, and transgressed not the boundaries of their proper natures; nor were the disorders begun, which are occasioned by the licence of unuly appetites. Glans.
You must not go where you may dangers meet.
Th' unuly sword will no distinction make,
And beauty will not there give wounds, but take. Dryden.
UNSAFE. adj. Not secure; hazardous; dangerous.
If they would not be drawn to seem his adversaries, yet others should be taught how unsafe it was to continue his friends. Hooker, b. v.
With speed retir'd
Where erst was thickest fight, th' angelick throng,
And left large field, unsafe within the wind
Of such commotion. Milton's Par. Lost, b. vi.
Uncertain ways unsafe are,
And doubt a greater mischief than despair. Denham.
Phlegyan robbers made unsafe the road. Dryden.
UNSAFELY. adv. Not securely; dangerously.
Take it, while yet 'tis praise, before my rage,
Unsafe just, break loose on this bad age;
So bad, that thou thyself hadst no defence
From vice, but barely by departing hence. Dryden.
As no man can walk, so neither can he think, uneasily or unsafe; but in using, as his legs, so his thoughts amble, which a virtuous man never doth. Grew.
UNSAID. adj. Not uttered; not mentioned.
Chanticleer shall with his words unsaid. Dryden.
That I may leave nothing material unsaid, among the several ways of imitation, I shall place translation and paraphrase. Fulton's Classicks.
UNSAITED. adj. Not pickled or seasoned with salt.
The muriatick scurvy, induced by two great quantity of sea-salt, and common among mariners, is cured by a diet of fresh unsalted things, and watery liquor acidulated. Arbutnot.
UNSATURATED. adj. [unsaturatus, Lat.] Not saluted.
Gods! I prate;
And the most noble mother of the world
Leave unsaturated. Shakespeare, Coriolanus.
UNSATURATED. adj. Unholy; not consecrated.
Her obsequies have been so far enlarged
As we have warranty; her death was doubtful;
And but that great command o'erways the order,
She should in ground unsaturated have lodg'd Till the last trump. Shakespeare's Hamlet.
UNSATISFIED. adj. [unsatisfabilis, Lat.] Not to be satisfied;
greedy without bounds.
Unsatisfiable in their longing to do all manner of good to all the creatures of God, but especially men. Hooker, b. i.
Craesus the Roman, for his unsatisfiable greediness, was called the gulph of avarice. Raleigh.
UNSATISFACTORYNESS. n. f. Failure of giving satisfaction.
That which most deters me from such trials, is their un- satisfactoriness, though they should succeed. Boyle.
UNSATISFACTORY. adj. Not giving satisfaction; not clearing the difficulty.
That speech of Adam, The woman thou gavest me to be with me, she gave me of the tree, and I did eat, is an un- satisfactory reply, and therein was involved a very impious error. Brown's Vulg. Errors.
Latria to the cross, is point blank against the definition of the council of Nice; and it is an unsatisfactory answer to say, they only were against latria given to images for themselves. Stillingfleet.
UNSATISFIEDNESS. n. f. [from unsatisfied.] The state of being not satisfied; want of fulness.
Between my own unsatisfiedness in conscience, and a necessity of satisfying the importunities of some, I was persuaded to chuse rather what was false, than what seemed just. K. Charles.
That unsatisfiedness with transitory fruitions, that men deplore as the unhappiness of their nature, is indeed the privilege of it, as it is the prerogative of men not to be pleas'd with such fond toys as children doat upon. Boyle.
UNSATISFIED. adj.
1. Not contented; not pleased.
O Elizabeth being to resolve upon a great officer, and being by some put in some doubt of that person, whom she meant to advance, said, she was like one with a lantern seeking a man, and seemed unsatisfied in the choice of a man for that place. Bacon.
Flashy wits, who cannot fathom a large discourse, must be very much unsatisfied of me.
Concerning the analytical preparation of gold, they leave persons unsatisfied. Boyle.
2. Not filled; not gratified to the full.
Though he was unsatisfied in getting,
Yet in bestowing he was most princely. Shakespeare.

UNS

Whether shall I, by justly plaguing
Him whom I hate, be more unjustly cruel
To her I love? or, being kind to her,
Be cruel to myself, and leave unsatisfied
My anger and revenge? Denham's Sophy.
Eternity, human nature can't look into, without a religious awe: our thoughts are lost in the endless view, and return to us weary and unsatisfied, without finding bounds or place to fix on. Rogers's Sermon.
UNSATISFYING. adj. Unable to gratify to the full.
Nor is fame only unsatisfying in itself, but the desire of it lays us open to many accidental troubles. Addison.
UNSAVOURINESS. adj. [from unsavoury.]
1. Bad taste.
2. Bad smell.
If we concede a national unsavouriness in any people, yet shall we find the Jews less subject hereto than any. Brown.
UNSAVOURY. adj.
1. Taffles.
Can that which is unsavoury be eaten without salt? or is there any taste in the white of an egg? Job vi. 6.
2. Having a bad taste.
Unsavoury food, perhaps,
To spiritual natures. Milton's Par. Lost.
3. Having an ill smell; fetid.
Some may emit an unsavoury odour, which may happen from the quality of what they have taken. Brown.
4. Unpleasant; disgusting.
Things of so mean regard, although necessary to be ordered, are notwithstanding very unsavoury, when they come to be disputed of; because disputation pre-supposeth some difficulty in the matter. Hooker, b. v.
Unsavoury news; but how made he escape? Shakespeare.
To UNSAVY. v. a. To retract; to recant; to deny what has been said.
Call you me fair? that fair again unsav;
Demetrius loves you, fair. Shakespeare.
Say and unsav, feign, flatter, or abjure. Milton.
How soon
Would height recall high thoughts, how soon unsav
What feign'd submission I wore. Milton's Par. Lost.
To say, and I stray unsav, pretending first
To fly pain, professing next the spy,
Argues no leader, but a liar trad.
There is nothing said there, which you may have occasion to unsav hereafter. Arbutnot.
UNSCALY. adj. Having no scales.
The jointed lobster, and unscale foale. Gar.
UNSCARRED. adj. Not marked with wounds.
And must the die for this? O let her live;
So the may live unsarred from bleeding laughter,
I will confess she was not Edward's daughter, Shakespeare.
UNSCOLASTICK. adj. Not bred to literature.
Notwithstanding these learned disputants, it was to the un- scholastick statesman, that the world owed their peace and liberties. Lact.
UNSCHOLED. adj. Uneducated; not learned.
When the apostles were ordained to alter the laws of heathenish religion, they were, St. Paul excepted, unscholed and unlettered men. Hooker, b. v.

I with much expedient march
Have brought a counter-check before your gates,
To save unscratch'd your city's threaten'd cheeks. Shakespeare.
UNSCREENED. adj. Not covered; not protected.
Those balls of burnished brass, the tops of churches are adorned with, derive their glittering brightness from their being exposed, unscreened, to the sun's refulgent beams. Boyle.
UNSCRIPTURAL. adj. Not defensible by scripture.
The doctrine delivered in my sermon was neither new nor unscriptural, nor in itself false. Atterbury.
To UNSEAL. v. a. To open any thing sealed.
This new glare of light
Cast sudden on his face, unseal'd his sight. Dryden.
UNSEAL'D. adj.

Your oaths
Are words, and poor conditions but unseal'd. Shakespeare.
2. Having the seal broken.
To UNSEAL. v. a. To rip; to cut open.
He ne'er shook hands, nor bid farewell to him,
Till he unseal'd him from the nape to th' chops,
And fix'd his head upon our battlements. Shakespeare.

UNS

UNSEARCHABLE. adj. Inscrutable; not to be explored.
All is best, though we often doubt
What th' unsearchable disposer
Of highest wisdom brings about,
And ever best found in the close. Milton's Agonistes.
Thou hast vouchsaf'd
This friendly condescension, to relate Things else by me unsearchable. Milton's Par. Lost.
Job discourseth of the secrets of nature, and unsearchable
perfections of the works of God.
These counsels of God are to us unsearchable; neither has he left us in scripture any marks, by which we may infallibly conclude ourselves in that happy number he has chosen. Rogers.
It is a vast hindrance to the enrichment of our understandings, if we spend too much of our time among infinities and unsearchables. Watts's Logick.
UNSEARCHABLENESS. n. f. Impossibility to be explored.
The unsearchableness of God's ways should be a bridle to restrain presumption, and not a sanctuary for spirits of error. Bramhall's Answer to Hobbes.
UNSEASONABLE. adj.
1. Not suitable to time or occasion; unfit; untimely; ill-timed.
Zeal, unless it be rightly guided, when it endeavours the most busily to please God, forceth upon him those unseasonable offices which please him not. Hooker, b. v.
Their counsel must seem very unseasonable, who advise men to suspect that wherewith the world hath had, by their own account, twelve hundred years acquaintance. Hooker.
It is then a very unseasonable time to plead law, when swords are in the hands of the vulgar. Spenker's Ireland.
The commissioners pulled down or defaced all images in churches, in such unseasonable fashion, as is done in horti-culty. Hayward.
This digression I conceived not unseasonable for this place, nor upon this occasion. Clarendon.
Haply mention may arise
Of something not unseasonable to ask.
Timothy lay out a-nights, and went abroad often at un- seasonable hours. Arbutnot.
2. Not agreeable to the time of the year.
Like an unseasonable stormy day,
Which makes the silver rivers drown their shores,
As if the world were all dissolv'd in tears. Shakespeare.
3. Late; as, unseasonable time of night.
UNSEASONABLENESS. n. f. Disagreement with time or place.
The moral goodness, unfitness, and unseasonableness of moral or natural actions, falls not within the verge of a brutal faculty. Hale's Origin of Mankind.
UNSEASONABLY. adv. Not seasonably; not agreeably to time or occasion.
Some things it asketh unseasonably, when they need not to be prayed for, as deliverance from thunder and tempest, when no danger is nigh. Hooker, b. v.
Leave to fathom such high points as these,
Nor be ambitious, ere the time, to please;
Unseasonably wife, till age and cares
Have form'd thy soul to manage great affairs. Dryden.
By the methods prescribed, more good, and less mischief, will be done in acute distempers, than by medicines improperly and unseasonably applied. Arbutnot.
Ulysses yielded unseasonably, and the strong passion for his country should have given him vigilance. Broome.
UNSEASONED. adj.
1. Unseasonable; untimely; ill-timed. Out of use.
Your majesty hath been this fortnight ill,
And these unseason'd hours perforce must add Unto your sickness. Shakespeare, Hen. IV.
I think myself in a better plight for a lender than you are;
the which hath something emboldened me to this unseasoned intrusion. Shakespeare.
2. Unformed; not qualified by use.
'Tis an unseason'd courier; advise him. Shakespeare.
3. Irregular; inordinate.
The commissioners pulled down or defaced all images in churches, in such unseasonable and unseasoned fashion, as if done in hostility. Hayward.
4. Not kept till fit for use.
Not salted; as, unseasoned meat. Brown.
UNSECONDED. adj.
1. Not supported.
Him did you leave
Second to none, unseconded by you,
To look upon the hideous god of war
In disadvantage. Shakespeare, Hen. IV.
2. Not exemplified a second time.
Strange and unseconded shapes of worms succeeded. Brown.
To UNSECRET. v. a. To disclose; to divulge.
He that consulteth what he should do, should not declare what he will do; but let princes beware, that the unsecreting of their affairs comes not from themselves. Bacon.

UNS

UNSECRET. adj. Not close; not trusty.
Who shall be true to us,
When we are so unsecret to ourselves? Shakespeare.
UNSECURE. adj. Not safe.
Love, though most sure,
Yet always to itself seems unsecure. Denham.
UNSEDUCTED. adj. Not drawn to ill.
If she remain unseduct, you not making it appear otherwise; for your ill opinion, and th' assault you have made to her chastity, you shall answer me with your sword. Shakespeare.
Among innumerable false, unmov'd,
Unshaken, unseduct, unterrify'd. Milton's Paradise Lost.
UNSEEING. adj. Wanting the power of vision.
I shou'd have scratch'd out your unseeing eyes,
To make my master out of love with thee. Shakespeare.
To UNSEEM. v. n. Not to seem. Not in use.
You wrong the reputation of your name,
In so *unseem*ing to confess receipt
Of that, which hath so faithfully been paid. Shakespeare.
UNSEEMLINESS. n. f. Indecency; indecorum; uncomeliness.
All as before his sight, whom we fear, and whose presence to offend with any the least unseemliness, we would be surely as loth as they, who most reprehend or deride that we do. Hooker, b. v.
UNSEMLY. n. f. Indecent; uncomely; unbecoming.
Contentions as yet were never able to prevent two evils;
the one a mutual exchange of unseemly and unjust disgraces offered by men, whose tongues and passions are out of rule;
the other a common hazard of both, to be made a prey by such as study how to work with most advantage in private. Hooker.
Let us now devise
What best may for the present serve to hide
The parts of each from other, that seem most
To shame obnoxious, and unseemly seem. Milton.
Her gifts
Were such, as under government well seem'd; Unseemly to bear rule. Milton's Par. Lost.
My sons, let your unseemly discord cease;
If not in friendship, live at least in peace. Dryden.
I with every unseemly idea, and wanton expression had been banish'd from amongst them. Watts.
UNSEMLY. adv. Indecently; unbecomingly.
Charity doth not behave itself unseemly, seeketh not her own. 1 Cor. xiii. 5.
Unmanly dread invades the French astonish'd;
Unseemly yelling; distant hills return
The hideous noise. Philips.
UNSEEN. adj.
1. Not seen; not discovered.
A jest unseen, inscrutable, invisible,
As a nose on a man's face, or a weathercock on a steeple. Sh.
Her father and myself
Will to dispose ourselves, that seeing, unseen,
We may of the encounter frankly judge. Shakespeare, Hamlet.
A painter became a physician; whereupon one said to him, you have done well; for before the faults of your work were seen, but now they are unseen. Bacon.
Here may I always on this downy grass,
Unknown, unseen, my easy minutes pass.
Millions of spiritual creatures walk the earth
Unseen, both when we wake, and when we sleep. Milton.
At his birth a star
Unseen before in heaven, proclaims him come;
And guides the eastern sages who enquire
His place, to offer incense, myrrh, and gold. Milton.
He that on her his bold hand lays,
With Cupid's pointed arrows plays;
They with a touch, they are to keen,
Wound us unthot, and the unseen. Waller.
The footsteps of the deity he treads,
And secret moves along the crowded space,
Unseen of all the rude Pheacian race. Pope's Odyssey.
2. Invisible; undiscoverable.
The weeds of heresy being grown into ripeness, do, even in the very cutting down, scatter oftentimes those seeds which for a while lie unseen and buried in the earth; but afterward freshly spring up again no less pernicious than at the first. Hooker.
On the came,
Led by her heavy hly maker, though unseen
And guided by his voice. Milton's Par. Lost.
3. Unskilled; unexperienced.
He was not unseen in the affections of the court, but had not reputation enough to reform it. Clarendon.
UNSEMLY. adj. Not addicted to private interest.
The most interested cannot purpose anything so much to their own advantage, notwithstanding which the inclination is nevertheless unsemlly. Spectator, N. 538.
UNSENT. adj.
1. Not sent.

UNS

2. UNSENT for. Not called by letter or messenger.
If a physician should go from house to house unsent for, and enquire what woman hath a cancer, or what man a fistula, he would be as unwelcome as the disease itself. Taylor.
Somewhat of weighty consequence brings you here to often, and unsent for. Dryden.
UNSEPARABLE adj. Not to be parted; not to be divided.
Oh world, thy slippery turns! Friends now fast sworn,
Who twine as 'twere in love
Unseparable, shall, within this hour,
Break out to bitterest enmity. Shakespeare. Coriolanus.
UNSEPARATED adj. Not parted.
There seek the Theban bard;
To whom Persephone, entire and whole,
Gave to retain th' unseparated soul. Pope's Odyssey.
UNSERVICEABLE adj. Useless; bringing no advantage or convenience.
The beast, impatient of his smarting wound,
Thought with his wings to fly above the ground;
But his late wounded wing unserviceable found. Spenser.
'Tis certainly demonstrated, that the condensation and expansion of any proportion of the air, is always proportional to the weight incumbent upon it: so that if the atmosphere had been much greater or less than it is, it would on the surface of the earth, have been unserviceable for vegetation and life. Bentley's Sermons.
It can be no unserviceable design to religion, to undeceive men in so important a point. Rogers's Sermons.
UNSERVICABLE adj. Without use; without advantage.
It does not enlarge the dimensions of the globe, or lie idly and unservicably there, but part of it is introduced into the plants which grow thereon, and the rest either remounts again, with the ascending vapour, or is wash'd down into rivers. Woodward's Nat. Hist.
UNSET adj. Not set; not placed.
They urge that God left nothing in his word undescribed, nothing unset down; and therefore charged them strictly to keep themselves into that without any alteration. Hooker.
TO UNSETTLE v. a.
1. To make uncertain.
Such a doctrine unsettles the titles to kingdoms and estates; for if the actions from which such settlements spring were illegal, all that is built upon them must be so too: but the last is absurd, therefore the first must be so likewise. Arbutnot.
2. To move from a place.
As big as he was, did there need any great matter to unsettle him. L'Estrange.
3. To overthrow.
UNSETTLED adj.
1. Not fixed in resolution; not determined; not steady.
Impartially judge, whether from the very first day that our religion was unsettled, and church government flung out of doors, the civil government has ever been able to fix upon a sure foundation. South's Sermons.
A solemn air, and the best comforter
To an unsettled fancy, cure thy brains. Shakespeare.
Prepar'd I was not
For such a business; there am I found
So much unsettled. Shakespeare.
With them, a bastard of the king deceas'd,
And all th' unsettled humours of the land,
Rash, inconsiderate, fiery, voluntary.
Uncertain and unsettled he remains Deep vers'd in books, and shallow in himself. Milton.
A covetous man deliberated betwixt the qualms of a wambling stomach, and an unsettled mind. L'Estrange.
Unsettled virtue stormy may appear;
Honour, like mine, serenely is severe. Dryden.
2. Unequable; not regular; changeable.
March and September, the two equinoxes, are the most windy and tempestuous, the most unsettled and unequable seasons in most countries. Bentley's Sermons.
3. Not established.
My cruel fate,
And doubts attending an unsettled state,
Forc'd me to guard my coast. Dryden.
4. Not fixed in a place or abode.
David supposed that it could not stand with the duty which he owed unto God, to set himself in an house of cedar trees, and to behold the ark of the Lord's covenant unsettled. Hooker.
UNSETTLEDNESS n. f.
1. Irresolution; undetermined state of mind.
2. Uncertainty; fluctuation.
The unsettledness of my condition has hitherto put a stop to my thoughts concerning it. Dryden.
3. Want of fixity.
When the sun shines upon a river, though its waves roll this way and that by the wind, yet, for all their unsettledness, the sun strikes them with a direct and certain beam. South.
UNSHIVERED adj. Not parted; not divided.
Honour and policy, like unshiver'd friends,
I th' war do grow together. Shakespeare. Coriolanus

UNS

Their bands, though slack, no dissolution fear;
Th' unshiver'd parts the greatest pressure bear;
Though loose, and fit to flow, they still cohere. Blackmore.
TO UNSHIVER v. a. To make otherways than the sex commonly is.
All you spirits
That tend on mortal thoughts, unsex me here,
And fill me, from the crown to th' toe, top full
Of direct cruelty. Shakespeare. Macbeth.

As Neptune's park, ribbed and paled in
With rocks unshakeable, and roaring waters. Shakespeare.
UNSHAKED adj. Not shaken. Not in use.
I know but one,
That unassailable holds on his rank,
Unshak'd of motion. Shakespeare. Julius Caesar.
UNSHAKEN adj.
1. Not agitated; not moved.
Purpose is
Of violent birth, but poor validity;
Which now, like fruits unripe, sticks on the tree,
But fall unshaken, when they mellow be. Shakespeare.
The wicked's spite against God, is but like a madman's running his head against the wall, that leaves the wall unshaken, but dashes his own brains out. Boyle.
2. Not subject to concussion.
3. Not weakened in resolution; not moved.
Among innumerable false, unmov'd,
Unshaken, uneduc'd, untearful'd.
Ill wast thou shroudest then,
O patient son of God! yet only flood'd Unshaken. Milton's Par. Regain'd, b. iv.
Employ it in unfeigned piety towards God, in unshaken duty to his vicegerent. Sprat.
His principles were founded in reason, and supported by virtue, and therefore did not lie at the mercy of ambition: his notions were no less steady and unshaken, than just and upright. Adajon.
TO UNSHAKEN v. a. To lose from bonds.
A laudable freedom of thought unshakes their minds from the narrow prejudices of education, and opens their eyes to a more extensive view of the publick good. Adajon.
UNSHAKED adj. Not shamed.
The brave man seeks not popular applause;
Unsham'd, though foil'd, he does the best he can:
Force is of brutes, but honour is of man. Dryden.
UNSHAPEN adj. Mismatched; deformed.
This unshapen earth we now inhabit, is the form it was found in, when the waters had retired. Burnet.
Gulping for breath, th' unshapen Phocæe die,
And on the boiling wave extended lie. Adajon.
UNSHAKED adj. Not partaken; not had in common.
Bliss, as thou hast part, to me is bliss;
Tediuous unshar'd with thee, and odious soon. Milton.
TO UNSHATH v. a. To draw from the scabbard.
Executioner, unshath thy sword;
Clifford's manhood lies upon his tongue. Shakespeare.
Mowbray, the bishop Scroop, Hastings, and all
Are brought to the correction of your law:
There is not now a rebel's sword unshath'd. Shakespeare.
Viewing the Trojan reliques, the unshath'd Æneas's sword. Denham.
Arcite, his sword unshath'd. Dryden.
Far hence be souls profane!
Now, Trojan, take the way thy fates afford;
Assume thy courage, and unshath thy sword. Dryden.
The Roman senate has resolv'd,
'Till time give better prospects, still to keep
The sword unshath'd, and turn its edge on Cæsar. Adajon.
Each chief his sev'nfold shield display'd,
And half unshath'd the shining blade. Pope.
UNSHED adj. Not split.
To blood unshed the rivers must be turn'd. Milton.
UNSHETERED adj. Wanting a screen; wanting protection.
He is breeding that worm, which will smite this gourd, and leave him unshetered to that scorching wrath of God, which will make the improvement of Jonah's passionate wish, that God would take away his life, his most rational desire. Decay of Piety.
UNSHIELDED adj. Not guarded by the shield.
He try'd a tough, well-chosen spear!
Though Cygnus then did no defence provide,
But scornful offer'd his unshielded side. Dryden.
TO UNSHIVER v. a. To take out of a ship.
At the cape we landed for fresh water; but discovering a leak, we unshipped our goods, and watered there. Guliver.

senseless effusions of indigested prayers, they oftentimes disgrace, in most unsufferable manner, the worthiest part of christian duty towards God. Hooker, b. v.
That glorious form, that light unsufferable,
And that far-beaming blaze of majesty,
Wherewith he went at heav'n's high council table
To fit the midst of trinal unity, Milton.
He laid aside
A stinking breath, and twenty ill smells besides, are more unsufferable by her natural stultifness. Swift.
UNSUFFICIENT. n. f. [Insufficiency, Fr.] Inability to answer the end proposed.
The error and insufficiency of the arguments, doth make it on the contrary side against them, a strong presumption that God hath not moved their hearts to think such things as he hath not enabled them to prove. Hooker, b. v.
UNSUFFICIENT. adj. [Insufficiency, Fr.] Unable; inadequate.
Malebranche having shewed the difficulties of the other to resist an invading enemy, the subject must be commanded out of the counties where they inhabit. Bacon.

UNWARY. adj.
1. Wanting caution; imprudent; hasty; precipitate.
Nor think me so unwary,
To bring my feet again into the snare, as when I was Where once I have been caught. Milton's Agonistes.
So spake the false archangel, and insid'rous Eve
Bad influence into th' unwary breast.
So talk'd the spirit'd fly snake; and Eve, unwaried Eve,
Yet more amaz'd, unwary thus reply'd. Milton.
Turning short, he struck with all his might Full on the helmet of th' unwary knight. Dryden.
Deep was the wound,
Propositions about religion are insinuated into the unwary, as well as unbiassed understandings of children, and riveted there by long custom. Locke.
2. Unexpected. Obsolete.
All in the open hall amaz'd stood,
At suddenness of that unwary fight,
And wonder'd at his breathless hasty mood. Fairy Queen.
UNWASHED. adj. Not washed; not cleansed by washing.
UNWASHEN. adj. Another lean unwash'd artificer Cuts off his tale, and talks of Arthur's death. Shakespeare.
To eat with unwashen hands defileth not a man. Matthew, xv.

U N W

He accepts of no unclean, no unwashed sacrifice; and if repentance utter not in, prayer will never find admittance. Dappa.
When the fleece is thorn, if sweat remains Unwash'd, it soaks into their empty veins. Dryden.
UNWASTED. adj. Not consumed; not diminished.
Why have those rocks so long unwasted stood,
Since, lavish of their stock, they through the flood
Have, ages past, their melting crystal spread,
And with their spoils the liquid regions fed? Blackmore.
UNWASTING. adj. Not growing less; not decaying.
Purest love's unwasting treasure;
Constant faith, fair hope, long leisure;
Sacred Hymen! these are thine. Pope.
UNWYED. adj. Not used to travel; not seasoned in the road.
Beasts that have been rid off their legs, are as much for a man's use, as colts that are unwyed, and will not go at all. Suckl.
UNWYKENED. adj. Not weakened.
By reason of the exhalation of some air out of the glass, the elical power of the remaining air was very much debilited, in comparison of the unwykened pressure of the external air. Boyle.
UNWYPOISED. adj. Not furnished with offensive arms.
As the beards are armed with fierce teeth, paws, horns, and other bodily instruments of much advantage against un-wypoised men; so hath reason taught man to strengthen his hand with such offensive arms, as no creature else can well avoid. Raleigh.
UNWYRIABLE. adj. Not to be tied.
Desire to resemble him in goodness, maketh them unwyrable. Hooker, b. i.
UNWYRIED. adj.
1. Not tired; not fatigued.
The Creator from his work
Dehshing, though unwyried, up return'd. Milton.
Their bloody talk unwyried, still they ply. Waller.
Still th' unwyried fire pursues the tuneful strain. Dryden.
2. Indefatigable; continual; not to be spent; not sinking under fatigue.
Joy'd to range abroad in fresh attire,
Through the wide compass of the airy coast,
And with unwyried limbs each part enquire. Spenser.
Godlike his unwyried bounty flows;
First loves to do, then loves the good he does. Denham.
A winged virtue through th' ethereal sky,
From orb to orb, unwyried dost thou fly. Tickell.
An unwyried devotion in the service of God, recommended the gospel to the world.
The righteous shall certainly be saved, but then the christian character of a righteous man implies a constant, unwyried perseverance in many painful instances of duty.
To UNWYRY. v. a. To refresh after weariness.
It unwyries, and refreshes more than any thing, after too great labour. Temple.
UNWYED. adj. Unmarried.
This servitude makes you to keep unwyed. Shakespeare.
UNWYDEABLE. adj. Not to be cloven.
Merciful heav'n!
Thou rather with thy sharp and sulph'rous bolt
Split'st the unwydeable and gnarled oak,
Than the soft myrtle. Shakespeare. Measure for Measure.
UNWYDED. adj. Not cleared from weeds.
Field 'tis an unwyded garden,
That grows to seed; things rank, and gross in nature, Possess it merely. Shakespeare's Hamlet.
UNWYDED. adj. Not lamented. Now unwyded.
He must not float upon his watry bier
Unwept, and welter to the parching wind,
Without the meed of some melodious tear. Milton.
UNWYING. adj. Ignorant; unknowing.
Her seeming dead he found with feigned fear,
As all unwyving of that well she knew;
And pained himself with busy care to rear
Her out of careless swoon. Fairy Queen, b. i.
But contrary, unwyving he fulfilled
The purpos'd counsel, pre-ordain'd and fix'd
Of the most high. Paradise Regain'd.
UNWYIGHED. adj.
1. Not examined by the balance.
Solomon left all the vessels unwyghed, because they were exceeding many. 1 Kings, vii.
2. Not considered; negligent.
What unwyghed behaviour hath this Flemish drunkard pickt out of my conversation, that he dares in this manner essay me? why he hath not been thrice in my company. Shakespeare.
Daughter, what words have pass'd thy lips unwyghed,
Deem not unjustly by my doom oppress'd,
Of human race the wisest, and the best. Pope's Ode, &c.
UNWYING. adj. Inconsiderate; thoughtless.
Wife! why, no question but he was—a very superficial, ignorant, unwyving fellow. Shakespeare.
UNWYLCOME. adj. Not pleasing; not grateful; not well received.

U N W

Such welcome and unwelcome things at once,
'Tis hard to reconcile. Shakespeare. Macbeth.
Soon as th' unwelcome news
From earth arriv'd at heaven-gate, displeas'd
All were who heard. Milton's Par. Lost, b. x.
Though he that brings unwelcome news
Has but a losing office, yet he that shews
Your danger first, and then your way to safety,
May heal that wound he made. Denham's Sophy.
Forc'd from her presence, and condemn'd to live;
Unwelcome freedom, and unthank'd reprieve. Dryden.
From the very first instances of perception, some things are grateful, and others unwelcome to them; some things that they incline to, and others that they fly. Locke.
Such hasty nights as these, would give very unwelcome interruptions to our labours. Bentley's Sermons.
UNWELT. adj. Not lamented; not bemoaned.
Our fatherless distress was left unmoan'd;
Your widow dolours likewise be unwept. Shakespeare. Rich. III.
We, but the slaves that mount you to the throne;
A bale, ignoble crowd, without a name;
Unwept, unworthy of the funeral flame;
By duty bound to forfeit each his life. Dryden.
UNWET. adj. Not moist.
Once I meant to meet
My fate with face unmov'd, and eyes unwept;
Yet since I have thee here in narrow room,
My tears shall set thee first adrift within thy tomb. Dryden.
UNWHET. adj. Not punished; not corrected with the rod.
Tremble, thou wretch,
That hast within thee undivulged crimes, Unwhet of justice. Shakespeare. K. Lear.
Once I caught him in a lie;
And then, unwhet, he had the grace to cry. Pope.
UNWHOLESOME. adj.
1. Infalubrious; mischievous to health.
The discovery of the disposition of the air, is good for the prognosticks of wholesome and unwholesome years. Bacon.
There I a prisoner chain'd, scarce freely draw
The air imprison'd also; close and damp,
Unwholesome draught; but here I find amends,
The breath of heav'n fresh-blowing, pure and sweet,
With day-spring-born; here leave me to respire. Milton.
How can any one be assured, that his meat and drink are not poisoned, and made unwholesome before they are brought to him? South.
Rome is never fuller of nobility than in summer; for the country towns are so infested with unwholesome vapours, that they dare not trust themselves in them; while the heats last. Milton on Italy.
Children born healthy, often contract diseases from an unwholesome nurse. Archibald in Diet.
2. Corrupt; tainted.
We'll use this unwholesome humidity; this gross, watry pumpion: we'll teach him to know turtles from pails. Shakespeare.
UNWIELDY. adv. Heavily; with difficult motion.
Unwieldily they wallow first in ooze;
Then in the shady covert seek repose. Dryden.
UNWIELDINESS. n. s. Heaviness; difficulty to move; or be moved.
To what a cumbersome unweildiness,
And burdensome corpulence my love had grown,
But that I made it feed upon
That which love worst endures, discretion. Donne.
The supposed unweildiness of its massy bulk, grounded upon our experience of the inaptitude of great and heavy bodies to motion, is a mere imposture of our senses. Glanville.
UNWIELDY. adj. Unmanageable; not easily moving or moved; bulky; weighty; ponderous.
An ague, meeting many humours in a fat, unweildy body of fifty-eight years old, in four or five fits, carried him out of the world. Part, huge of bulk!
Wallowing unweildy, enormous in their gait, Tempest the ocean. Milton's Par. Lost, b. vii.
Unweildy fims of wealth, which higher broods,
Than files of marsh'd figures can account. Dryden.
Nothing here th' unweildy rock avails,
Reboulding harmless from the plated scales,
That, firmly join'd, preserv'd him from a wound,
With native armour crust'd all around. Addison's Ovid.
What carriage can bear away all the rude and unweildy lop-pings of a branchy tree at once? Watts's Impr. of the Mind.
UNWILLING. adj. Loath; not contented; not inclined; not complying by inclination.
The nature of man is unwilling to continue doing that wherein it shall always condemn itself. Hooker, b. v.
If thou dost find him tractable, encourage him,
and tell him all our reasons;
If he be leaden, icy, cold, unwilling, encourage him, and tell him all our reasons. Shakespeare's Rich. III.

UNW

If the sun rise unwilling to his race,
Clouds on his brows, and spots upon his face,
Suspect a drizzling day. Dryden.
Heav'n's unchang'd decrees attentive hear;
More pow'rful gods have torn thee from my side,
Unwilling to resign, and doom'd a bride. Dryden.
UNWILLINGLY. adv. Not with good-will; not without loath-
ness.

The whining school-boy, with his fatchel,
And frowning morning face, creeping like snail Unwillingly to school. Shakefp. As You Like It.
A feast the people hold to Dagon, and forbid
Laborious works, unwillingly this rest
Their superstition yields. Milton's Agonistes.

Still dismay'd
By seas or skies, unwillingly they stay'd. Denham.
These men were once the prince's foes, and then Unwillingly they made him great: but now,
Being his friends, shall willingly undo him. Denham.
The dire contagion spreads so fast,
That where it seizes, all relief is vain;
And therefore must unwillingly lay waste
That country, which would else the foe maintain. Dryden.

UNWILLINGNESS. n. f. Loathsomeness; disinclination.
Obedience, with professed unwillingness to obey, is no better than manifest disobedience. Hooker, b. v.
What moved the man to yield to her persuasions? Even the same cause that hath moved all men since, an unwil- lingness to grieve her, and make her sad, left she should pine, and be overcome with sorrow. Raleigh's Hist. of the World.

I see with what unwillingness
You lay upon me this command, and through your fears Discern your love, and therefore must obey you. Denham.
There is in most people a reluctance and unwillingness to be forgotten. We observe, even among the vulgar, how fond they are to have an inscription over their grave. Swift.

To UNWIND. v. a. pret. and part. passive unwound.
1. To separate any thing convolved; to untwist; to untwine.
All his subjects having by some years learned, so to hope for good and fear harm, only from her, that it should have needed a stronger virtue than his, to have unwound to deeply an entered vice. Sidney, b. ii.

Empirick politicians use deceit:
You boldly shew that skill which they pretend,
And work by means as noble as your end;
Which should you veil, we might unwind the clue,
As men do nature, till we came to you. Dryden.

2. To disentangle; to loose from entanglement.
Desiring to serve God as they ought; but being not so skillful as in every point to unwind themselves, where the snarers of glozing speech lie to entangle them, are in mind not a little troubled, when they hear so bitter invectives against that, which this church hath taught them to reverence as holy. Hooker, b. v.

As you unwind her love from him,
Left it should ravel, and be good to none,
Bottom it on me. Shakefp. Two Gentlemen of Verona.

To UNWIND. v. n. To admit evolution.
Put the bottoms into clean scalding water, and they will easily unwind. Mortimer's Husbandry.

UNWIPED. adj. Not cleared.
Their hands and faces were all badg'd with blood,
So were their daggers, which unwip'd we found Upon their pillows. Shakefp. Macbeth.

UNWISE. adj. Weak; defective in wisdom.
O good, but most unwise patricians! why,
You grave, but reckless senators, have you thus Giv'n Hydra here to chafe an officer? Shakefp. Coriolanus.
Be not ta'en tardy by unwise delay. Shakefp.
He who of those delights can judge, and spare
To interpose them oft, is not unwise. Milton.
This the Greeks say, this the barbarians; the wife and the unwise. Tillotson.

When kings grow stubborn, slothful, or unwise,
Each private man for public good should rise. Dryden.
When the balance of power is duly fixt in a state, nothing is more dangerous or unwise, than to give way to the first steps of popular encroachments. Swift.

UNWISLY. adv. Weakly; not prudently; not wisely.
Lady Zelmane, like some, unwisely liberal, that more delight to give presents than pay debts, chose rather to bestow her love upon me, than to recompense him. Sidney.
Unwisely we the wiser East Pity, supposing them oppress'd
With tyrant's force. Waller.

To UNWISH. v. a. To wish that which is, not to be.
My niece, would you and I alone,
Without more help, could fight this royal battle.—
—Why now thou hast unwish'd five thousand men;
Which likes me better than to wish us one. Shakefp.

UNW

To desire there were no God, were plainly to unwish their own being, which must be annihilated in the subtraction of that essence, which substantially supporteth them. Brown.

UNWISHED. adj. Not fought; not desired.
So jealous is she of my love to her daughter, that I never yet begin to open my mouth to the inevitable Philoclea, but that her unwish'd presence gave my tale a conclusion, before it had a beginning. Sidney.

To his unwish'd yoke
My foul consents not to give for reigny. Shakefp.
While heaping unwish'd wealth I distant roam;
The best of brothers at his natal home
By the dire fury of a traitress wife,
Ends the sad evening of a stormy life. Pope.

UNWIS'T. adj. Unthought of; not known.
To UNWIT. v. a. To deprive of understanding. Not used.
Friends all but now; even now
In quarter, and in terms like bride and groom
Divesting them for bed; and then, but now,
As if some planet had unwisit men,
Swords out, and tilting one at other's breasts. Shakefp.

UNWITHDRA'WING. adj. Continually liberal.
Wherefore did nature pour her bounties forth,
With such a full and unwithdrawing hand,
Covering the earth with odours, fruits, and flocks? Milton.
UNWITHSTOOD. adj. Not opposed.

Credly plains,
And Agincourt, deep ting'd with blood, confels
What the Slurs vigour unwithstood, Cou'd do in rigid fight. Philips.

UNWITNESSED. adj. Wanting evidence; wanting notice.
Least their zeal to the cause should any way be unwit- nessed. Hooker.

UNWITTINGLY. adv. [Properly unweetingly, from unweeting.]
Without knowledge; without consciousness.
In these fatal things it falls out, that the high-working powers make second causes unwittingly accessory to their determinations. Sidney.

Those things are termed most properly natural agents, which keep the law of their kind unwittingly, as the heavens and elements of the world, which can do no otherwise than they do. Hooker, b. i.

Atheists repudiate all title to heaven, merely for present pleasure; besides the extreme madness of running such a deperate hazard after death, they unwittingly deprive themselves here of that tranquillity they seek for. Bentley.

UNWONTED. adj.
1. Uncommon; unusual; rare; infrequent.
His sad, dull eyes, sunk deep in hollow pits,
Could not endure th' unwonted sun to view. Fairy Queen.

My father's of a better nature
Than he appears by speech; this is unwonted
Which now came from him. Shakefp.
Every unwonted meteor is portentous, and some divine prophecy. Glanville.
Thick breath, quick pulse, and heaving of my heart,
All signs of some unwonted change appear. Dryden.

2. Unaccustomed; unused.
Philoclea, who blushing, and withal smiling, making shamefastness pleasant, and pleasure shamefast, tenderly moved her feet, unwonted to feel the naked ground. Sidney, b. ii.
Sea calves unwonted to fresh waters fly. Mog.

O how oft shall he
On faith and changed gods complain; and seas
Rough with black winds and storms, Unwonted shall admire. Milton.

UNWORKING. adj. Living without labour.
Lazy and unworking shopkeepers in this being worse than gamesters, do not only keep so much of the money of a country in their hands, but make the publick pay them for it. Locke.

UNWORKSHIPPED. adj. Not adored.
He resolv'd to leave Unworkshipp'd, unobey'd the throne supreme. Milton.

UNWORTHILY. adv. Not according to desert; either above or below merit.
I vow'd, base knight,
To tear the garter from thy craven leg,
Which I have done, because unworthily
Thou wast intail'd. Shakefp. Hen. VI.

Fearing lest my jealous aim might err,
And so unworthily disgrace the man,
I gave him gentle looks. Shakefp.
If we look upon the Odyssey as all a fiction, we consider it unworthily. It ought to be read as a story founded upon truth, adorned with embellishments of poetry. Brown.

UNWORTHINESS. n. f. Want of worth; want of merit.
A mind fearing the unworthiness of every word that should be presented to her ears, at length brought it forth in this manner. Sidney, b. ii.

UNY

O let not an excellent spirit do itself such wrong, as to think where it is placed, embraced, and loved, there can be any unworthiness; since the weakest mist is not easier driven away by the sun, than that is chased away with so high thoughts. Sidney.

Every night he comes with songs compos'd
To her unworthiness: it nothing it tends us
To chide him from our caves, for he perlists. Shakefp.
I fear'd to find you in another place;
But, since you're here, my jealousy grows less:
You will be kind to my unworthiness. Dryden.

Have a true and humble sense of your own unworthiness, which will not suffer you to rise to a confidence unwarrantably pretended to by some. Wake on Death.

UNWORTHY. adj.
1. Not deserving.
The Athanasian creed and doxology should remain in use, the one as a most divine explication of the chiefest articles of our christian belief; the other as an heavenly acclamation of joyful applause to his praises, in whom we believe: neither the one nor the other unworthy to be heard founding, as they are in the church of Christ. Hooker.

Every particular accident, not unworthy the remembrance, for brevity I wittingly pass over. Kneller.
2. With fault merit.
Degree being vizarded,

Th' unworthiest shews as fairly in the mask. Shakefp.
Are there unworthy men chosen to offices? Whiggists.
So may I, blind fortune leading me,
Mist that which one unworthier may attain;
And die with grieving. Shakefp. Merch. of Venice.

3. Mean.
Tell me, Philoclea, did you ever see such a shepherd?
did you ever hear of such a prince? and then tell me if a small or unworthy assault have conquered me? Sidney.

4. Not suitable; not adequate.
I laid at her feet a work, which was unworthy her, but which I hope she will forgive. Dryden.
Our friend's papers are in my hands, and I will take care to suppress things unworthy of him. Pope to Swift.

Care is taken to interperic additions in such a manner, that scarce any book can be bought, without purchasing something unworthy of the author. Swift.

5. Unbecoming; vile.
The brutal action rous'd his manly mind:
Mov'd with unworthy usage of the maid,
He, though unarm'd, resolv'd to give her aid. Dryden.

UNWOUND. part. pass. and pret. of unwind. Untwisted.
Thatchers tie with withs, but old pitch'd ropes unwound are more lasting. Mortimer's Husbandry.

UNWOUNDED. adj.
1. Not wounded.
We may offend
Our yet unwounded enemies. Milton's Par. Lost, b. vi.

2. Not hurt.
Oh! blest with temper:
She who can love a sifter's charms, or hear Sighs for a daughter with unwounded ear. Pope.

To UNWREATH. v. a. To untwine.
The beads of wild oats, and of divers other wild plants, continually wreath and unwreath themselves, according to the temperature of the ambient air. Boyle.

UNWRITING. adj. Not assuming the character of an author.
The peace of the honest unwriting subject was daily molest. Arbuthnot.

UNWRITTEN. adj. Not conveyed by writing; oral; traditional.
A rule of right unwritten, but delivered by tradition from one to another. Spenser's State of Ireland.

As to his understanding, they bring him in void of all notion, a rude, unwritten blank; making him to be created as much an infant, as others are born. South's Sermons.

The laws of England may be divided into the written law, and the unwritten. Hale.

UNWORKED. adj. Not laboured; not manufactured.
Or prove at least to all of wiser thought,
Their hearts were fertile land, although unworkt. Fairfax.

Yet thy moist clay is pliant to command;
Unworkt and easy to the potter's hand:
Now take the mold, now bend thy mind to feel
The first sharp motions of the forming wheel. Dryden.

UNWRUNG. adj. Not pinched.
We that have free souls, it touches us not; let the galled jade winch, our withers are unwring. Shakefp. Hamlet.

UNYIELDED. adj. Not given up.
O'erpower'd at length, they force him to the ground,
Unyielded as he was, and to the pillar bound. Dryden.

To UNYOKED. v. a.
1. To loose from the yoke.
Our army is dispers'd already:
Like youthful fleers unyok'd, they took their course
East, west, north, south. Shakefp. Hen. IV.

VOC

Homer calls them like gods, and yet gives them the employment of slaves; they unyoke the mules. Brooks.

2. To part; to disjoin.
Shall these hands, so lately purg'd of blood,
So join'd in love, so strong in both,
Unyoke this seizure, and this kind regret. Shakefp.

UNYOKED. adj.
1. Having never worn a yoke.
Sev'n bullocks yet unyok'd for Phœbus chuse,
And for Diana sev'n unspotted ewes. Dryden.

2. Licentious; unrestrained.
I will a-while uphold
The unyok'd humour of your idleness. Shakefp. Hen. IV.

UNZONED. adj. Not bound with a girdle.
Easy her motion seem'd, serene her air;
Full, though unzon'd, her bosom. Prior.

VOCABULARY. n. f. [vocabulary, Lat. vocabularium, Fr.] A dictionary; a lexicon; a word-book.
Some have delivered the polity of spirits, and that they stand in awe of conjurations, which signify nothing, not only in the dictionary of man, but in the subtiler vocabulary of Satan. Brown's Vulg. Errors.

Among other books, we should be furnished with vocabula- ries and dictionaries of several forts. Watts.
VOCAL. adj. [vocal, Fr. vocalis, Lat.]

1. Having a voice.
Eyes are vocal, tears have tongues;
And there be words not made with lungs;
Sententious show! O let them fall,
Their cadence is rhetorical. Crosshaw.

Witness if I be silent, morn or even,
To hill, or valley, fountain, or fresh shade;
Made vocal by my song, and taught his praise. Milton.

Smooth-sliding Mincius, crown'd with vocal reeds,
That strain I heard was of a higher mood. Milton.
None can animate the lyre,
And the mute strings with vocal souls inspire,

As Helen, in whose eyes ten thousand Cupids dwell. Dryden.
Mennon, though stone, was counted vocal;
But 'twas the god, mean while, that spoke all.

Rome oft has heard a cross haranguing,
With prompting priest behind the hanging. Prior.

2. Uttered or modulated by the voice.
They which, under pretence of the law ceremonial being abrogated, require the abrogation of instrumental music, approving nevertheless the use of vocal melody to remain, must shew some reason wherefore the one should be thought a legal ceremony, and not the other. Hooker.

And join'd their vocal worship to the choir
Of creatures wanting voice. Milton's Par. Lost.

VOCALITY. n. f. [vocalitas, Lat. from vocal.] Power of utterance; quality of being utterable by the voice.
L and R being in extremes, one of roughness, the other of smoothness and freeness of vocality, are not easy in tract of vocal speech to be pronounced spiritaly. Holder.

To VOCALIZE. v. a. [from vocal.] To form into voice.
It is one thing to give an impulse to breath alone; and other thing to vocalize that breath, i. e. in its passage through the larynx, to give it the sound of human voice. Holder.

VOCALLY. adv. [from vocal.] In words; articulately.
Although it is as natural to mankind, to express their desires vocally, as it is for brutes to use their natural vocal signs; yet the forming of languages into this or that fashion, is a business of institution. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

VOCATION. n. f. [vocation, Fr. vocatio, Lat.]
1. Calling by the will of God.
Neither doth that which St. Paul, or other apostles, teach, enforce the utter disability of any other men's vocation thought requisite in this church for the saving of souls. Hooker, b. v.

They which thus were in God eternally by their intended admission to life, have, by vocation or adoption, God actually now in them. Hooker, b. v.

2. Summons.
What can be urged for them who not having the vocation of poverty to scribble, out of meer wantonness make themselves ridiculous? Dryden.

3. Trade; employment.
He would think his service greatly rewarded, if he might obtain by that means to live in the sight of his prince, and yet practise his own chosen vocation. Sidney, b. i.

God's mother, in a vision full of majesty,
Will'd me to leave my base vocation. Shakefp. Hen. VI.
God has furnished men with faculties sufficient to direct them in the way they should take, if they will seriously employ them, when their ordinary vocations allow them the leisure. Locke.

A whore in her vocation,
Keeps punctual to an assignation. Swift.

VOCATIVE. n. f. [vocativus, Fr. vocativus, Lat.] The grammatical case used in calling or speaking to.

VOI

VOCIFERA'TION. n. f. [vociferatio, vocifero, Lat.] Clamour; outcry.
The lungs, kept too long upon the stretch by vociferation, or loud singing, may produce the same effect. Arbutnot.
VOCIFEROUS. adj. [vocifero, Lat.] Clamorous; noisy.
Several templars, and others of the more vociferous kind of critics, went with a resolution to hiss, and confest'd they were forced to laugh. Pope.
VOGUE. n. f. [vogue, Fr. from voguer, to float, or fly at large.] Fashion; mode.
It is not more absurd to undertake to tell the name of an unknown person by his looks, than to vouch a man's faintship from the vogue of the world. South.
Use may revive the obsolete words,
And banish those that now are most in vogue. Roscommon.
What fashions th' have, and what they drive at
In publick vogues, or what in private. Hudibras.
In the vogue of the world, it passes for an exploit of honour, for kings to run away with whole countries that they have no pretence to. L'Estrange.
No periodical writer, who always maintains his gravity, and does not sometimes sacrifice to the graces, must expect to keep in vogue for any time. Addison.
At one time they keep their patients so close and warm, as almost to fiddle them; and all on a sudden the cold regimen is in vogue. Baker's Reflections on Learning.
VOICE. n. f. [vox, Fr. vois, Lat.]
1. Sound emitted by the mouth.
2. Sound of the mouth, as distinguished from that uttered by another mouth.
Air in sounds that are not tones, which are all equal, admitteth much variety, as in the voices of living creatures, and in the voices of several men; for we can discern several men by their voices. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
3. Any sound made by breath.
O Marcus, I am warm'd; my heart
Leaps at the trumpet's voice, and burns for glory. Addison.
4. Vote; suffrage; opinion expressed.
Are you all resolv'd to give your voices?
But that's no matter, the greater part carries it. Shakespeare.
I've no words;
My voice is in my sword! thou bloodier villain
Than terms can give thee out. Shakespeare. Macbeth.
The state was betrayed by the multitude and corruption of voices, and must shortly perish, if not committed to the grave judgment of some few; for two hundred gave voices, reducing that multitude to fifty, who, for their experience, were holden for men of greatest gravity. Knolles.
Some laws ordain, and some attend the choice
Of holy senates, and elect by voice. Dryden.
TO VOICE. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To rumour; to report. Out of use.
Is this th' Athenian minion, whom the world
Voic'd to regardfully? Shakespeare. Timon of Athens.
It was voiced that the king purposed to put to death Edward Plantagenet, prisoner in the tower; whereat there was great murmur. Bacon's Hen. VII.
Many fought to feed
The easy creditors of novelties,
By voicing him alive. Daniel's Civil War.
2. To vote.
Your minds, pre-occupied with what
You rather must do, than what you should do,
Made you, against the grain, to voice him consul. Shakespeare.
TO VOICE. v. n. To clamour; to make outcries. Obsolete.
Stir not questions of jurisdiction; and rather assume thy right in silence, than voice it with claims. Bacon.
It is not the gift of every person to harangue the multitude, to voice it loud and high. South's Sermons.
VOICED. adj. [from the noun.] Furnished with a voice.
That's Erythraea
Or some angel voic'd like her. 'Tis she! my struggling foul
Would fain go out to meet and welcome her! Denham.
VOID. adj. [voides, Fr.]
1. Empty; vacant.
The earth was without form and void, and darkness was upon the face of the deep. Genesis i. 2.
I'll get me to a place more void, and there Speak to great Cæsar as he comes along. Shakespeare.
2. Vain; ineffectual; null; vacated.
If it be void, and to no purpose, that the names of men are so frequent in their books, what did move them to bring them in?
My word shall not return void, but accomplish that which I please. Isa. lv. 11.
This custom made their whole government void, as an engine built against human society, worthy to be fired and pulled down. Bacon.
Though the wisdom of a future parliament may find cause to declare this, or that act of parliament void, yet there will be the same temper requisite to repeal it. Clarendon.

VOL

The two houses declared, that nothing which should front that time pass under the great seal, should be good and valid, but void and null. Clarendon, b. viii.
Some kind of subjection is due from every man to every man, which cannot be made void by any power whatsoever. Swift.
3. Unfurnished; unoccupied.
Queen Elizabeth, importuned much to supply divers great offices that had been long void, answered nothing to the matter, but rose up on the sudden, and said, I am sure my office will not be long void. Camden.
4. Wanting; unfurnished; empty.
If some be admitted into the ministry, void of learning, or few in life, are all the rest to be condemned? Whitefield.
How void of reason are our hopes and fears! Dryden.
Being void of all friendship and enmity, they never complain. Swift.
5. Unsubstantial; unreal.
Senseless, lifeless idol, void and vain. Pope.
VOID. n. f. [from the adj.] An empty space; vacuum; vacancy.
Pride, where wit fails, steps in to our defence,
And fills up all the mighty void of sense. Pope.
With what power
Were first th' unwieldy planets launch'd along
Th' illimitable void? Thomson.
TO VOID. v. a. [from the adjective; voides, Fr.]
1. To quit; to leave empty.
If they will fight with us, bid them come down,
Or void the field. Shakespeare. Hen. V.
How in our voiding lobby hast thou stood,
And duly waited for my coming forth? Shakespeare. Hen. VI.
Towards this passage, somewhat darker than the chamber which he voided, this assassin gave him, with a back blow, a deep wound into his left side. Watson's Buckingham.
2. To emit; to pour out.
The ascending water is vented by fits, every circumvolution voiding only so much as is contained in one helix. Wilkins.
3. To emit as excrement.
Excrements smell ill to the same creature that voideth them; and the cat burieth what she voideth. Bacon.
Believ'd the heav'ns were made of stone,
Because the sun had voided one. Hudibras.
By the use of emulsions, and frequent emollient injections, his urine voided more easily. Wise's Surgery.
Fleshy filaments, or matter voided by urine, are suspicious symptoms of a stone in the kidneys, especially if the patient has been subject to voiding of gravel. Arbutnot.
4. To vacate; to nullify; to annul.
It was become a practice, upon any specious pretences, to void the security that was at any time given for money so borrowed. Clarendon.
VOIDABLE. adj. [from void.] Such as may be annulled.
If the metropolitan, pretending the party deceased had bona notabilia in divers dioceses, grants letters of administration, such administration is not void, but voidable by a sentence. Ayl.
VOIDER. n. f. [from void.] A basket, in which broken meat is carried from the table.
A voider for the nonce,
I wrong the devil should I pick their bones. Cleveland.
VOIDNESS. n. f. [from void.]
1. Emptiness; vacancy.
2. Nullity; inefficacy.
3. Want of substantiality.
If thereby you understand their nakedness and voidness of all mixt bodies, good divines are of opinion, that the work of the creation was not in itself distinguished by days. Hale.
VOITURE. n. f. [French.] Carriage; transportation by carriage. Not in use.
They ought to use exercise by voiture or carriage. Arbutnot.
VOLANT. adj. [volans, Lat. volans, Fr.]
1. Flying; passing through the air.
The volant, or flying automata, are such mechanical contrivances as have a self-motion, whereby they are carried aloft in the air, like birds. Wilkins's Math. Magick.
2. Nimble; active.
His volant touch
Instinct through all proportions, low, and high, Fled, and pursu'd transverber the resonant fugue. Milton.
Blind British bards, with volant touch,
Traverse loquacious strings, whose solemn notes
Provoke to harmless revels. Philips.
VOLATILE. adj. [volatilis, Lat.]
1. Flying; passing through the air.
The caterpillar towards the end of summer waxeth volatile, and turneth to a butterfly. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
There is no creature only volatile, or no flying animal but hath feet as well as wings; because there is not sufficient food for them always in the air. Ray on the Creation.
2. [Volatile, Fr.] Having the power to pass off by spontaneous evaporation.
In vain, though by their pow'rful art they bind Volatile Hermes. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. iii.
When

VOL

When arsenick with soap gives a regulus, and with mercury sublimate a volatile fusible salt, like butter of antimony; doth not this shew that arsenick, which is a substance totally volatile, is compounded of fix'd and volatile parts, strongly cohering by a mutual attraction; so that the volatile will not ascend without carrying up the fixed? Newton.
3. Lively; fickle; changeable of mind; full of spirit.
Active spirits, who are ever skimming over the surface of things with a volatile temper, will fix nothing in their mind. Watts's Improvement of the Mind.
You are as giddy and volatile as ever, just the reverie of Mr. Pope, who hath always loved a domestic life. Swift.
VOLATILE. n. f. [volatile, Fr.] A winged animal.
The air conveys the heat of the sun, maintains fires, and serves for the flight of volatiles. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
VOLATILENESS. n. f. [volatilitas, Fr. from volatilis.]
VOLATILITY. n. f. [volatilitas, Fr. from volatilis.]
1. The quality of flying away by evaporation; not fixity.
Upon the compound body, chiefly observe the colour, fragility, or plantiness, the volatility or fixation, compared with simple bodies. Bacon.
Of volatility, the utmost degree is, when it will fly away without returning.
Heat causeth the spirits to search some issue out of the body, as in the volatility of metals. Bacon.
The animal spirits cannot, by reason of their subtilty and volatility, be discovered to the sense. Hale.
The volatility of mercury argues that they are not much bigger; nor may they be much less, lest they lose their opacity. Newton's Opticks.
By the spirit of a plant, we understand that pure, elaborated oil, which, by reason of its extreme volatility, exhales spontaneously, in which the odour or smell consists. Arbutnot.
2. Mutability of mind.
VOLATILIZATION. n. f. [from volatilize.] The act of making volatile.
Chemists have, by a variety of ways, attempted in vain the volatilization of the salt of tartar. Boyle.
TO VOLATILIZE. v. a. [volatilizer, Fr. from volatilis.] To make volatile; to subtilize to the highest degree.
Spirit of wine has a refractive power, in a middle degree between those of water and oily substances, and accordingly seems to be composed of both, united by fermentation; the water, by means of some saline spirits with which it is impregnated, dissolving the oil, and volatilizing it by the action. Newton's Opticks.
Spirituos liquors are so far from attenuating, volatilizing, and rendering perspirable the animal fluids, that it rather condenses them. Arbutnot on Aliments.
VOLE. n. f. [vole, Fr.] A deal at cards, that draws the whole tricks. Past fix, and not a living soul!
I might by this have won a vole. Swift.
VOLCANO. n. f. [Italian, from Vulcan.] A burning mountain.
Navigators tell us there is a burning mountain in an island, and many volcanos, and fiery hills. Brown.
When the Cyclops o'er their anvils sweat,
From the volcano's gross eruptions rise,
And curling sheets of smoke obscure the skies. Garth.
Subterraneous minerals ferment, and cause earthquakes, and cause furious eruptions of volcanos, and tumble down broken rocks. Bentley's Sermons.
VOLERY. n. f. [volerie, Fr.] A flight of birds.
An old boy, at his first appearance, is sure to draw on him the eyes and chirping of the whole town volery; amongst which, there will not be wanting some birds of prey, that will presently be on the wing for him. Locke.
VOLITATION. n. f. [volitis, Lat.] The act or power of flying.
Birds and flying animals are almost erect, advancing the head and breast in their progression, and only prone in the act of volitation. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
VOLITION. n. f. [volitis, Lat.] The act of willing; the power of choice exerted.
There is as much difference between the approbation of the judgment, and the actual volitions of the will, as between a man's viewing a desirable thing with his eye, and reaching after it with his hand. South's Sermons.
Volition is the actual exercise of the power the mind has to order the consideration of any idea, or the forbearing to consider it; or to prefer the motion of any part of the body to its rest, by directing any particular action, or its forbearance. Locke.
VOLITIVE. adj. Having the power to will.
They not only perfect the intellectual faculty, but the volitive; making the man not only more knowing, but more wise and better. Hale.
VOLLEY. n. f. [volle, Fr.]
1. A flight of shot.
From the wood a volley of shot flew two of his company. Raleigh's Apology.

VOL

More on his guns relies, than on his sword,
From whence a fatal volley we receiv'd. Waller.
2. A burst; an emission of many at once.
A fine volley of words, gentlemen, and quickly shot off. Shakespeare.
Disfrustful sense with modest caution speaks;
It still looks home, and short excursions makes;
But rattling nonsense in full volleys breaks. Pope.
TO VOLLEY. v. n. To throw out.
The holding every man shall beat as loud
As his strong sides can volley. Shakespeare. Ant. and Cleopatra.
VOLLED. adj. [from volley.] Disposed; discharged with a volley.
I stood
Thy fiercest, when in battle to thy aid
The blasting volley'd thunder made all speed. Milton.
The Gallick navy, impotent to bear
His volley'd thunder, torn, dislever'd, scud. Philips.
VOLTE. n. f. [volte, Fr.] Volte signifies a round or a circular tread; a gate of two treads made by a horse going sideways round a center; so that these two treads make parallel tracks, the one which is made by the fore feet larger, and the other by the hinder feet smaller; the shoulders bearing outwards, and the croupe approaching towards the center. Farrier's Dict.
VOLUBILITY. n. f. [volubilitas, Fr. volubilitas, from volubilis, Lat.]
1. The act or power of rolling.
Volubility, or aptness to roll, is the property of a bowl, and is derived from its roundness. Watts's Logick.
Then celestial spheres should forget their wonted motions, and by irregular volubility, turn themselves any way, as it might happen. Hooker, b. i.
2. Activity of tongue; fluency of speech.
Say the be mute, and will not speak a word;
Then I'll commend her volubility. Shakespeare.
He express'd himself with great volubility of words, natural and proper. Clarendon.
He had all the French assurance, cunning, and volubility of tongue. Addison.
She ran over the catalogue of diversions with such a volubility of tongue, as drew a gentle reprimand from her father. Female Quixote.
3. Mutability; lability to revolution.
He that's a victor this moment, may be a slave the next; and this volubility of human affairs, is the judgment of providence, in the punishment of oppression. L'Estrange.
VOLUBLE. adj. [volubilis, Lat.]
1. Formed so as to roll easily; formed so as to be easily put in motion.
Neither the weight of the matter of which a cylinder is made, nor its round voluble form, which, meeting with a precipice, do necessarily continue the motion of it, are any more imputable to that dead, choiceless creature in its first motion. Hammond.
The adventitious corpuscles may produce stability in the matter they pervade, by expelling thence those voluble particles, which, whilst they continued, did by their shape unfit for cohesion, or, by their motion, oppose coalition. Boyle.
2. Rolling; having quick motion.
This less voluble earth,
By shorter flight to th' east, had left him there. Milton.
Then voluble, and bold; now hid, now seen,
Among thick-woven arborets. Milton's Par. Lost, b. iv.
3. Nimble; active. Applied to the tongue.
A friend promised to dissect a woman's tongue, and examine whether there may not be in it certain juices, which render it so wonderfully voluble and flippant. Addison.
These with a voluble and flippant tongue, become mere echo's. Watts's Improvement of the Mind.
4. Fluent of words. It is applied to the speech, or the speaker.
Cassio, a knave very voluble; no further conscionable, than in putting on the meer form of civil and humane seeming, for the better compassing of his loose affection. Shakespeare.
If voluble and sharp discourse be marr'd, Unkindness blunts it more than marble hard. Shakespeare.
VOLUME. n. f. [volumen, Lat.]
1. Something rolled, or convolved.
2. As much as seems convolved at once; as a fold of a serpent, a wave of water.
Threecore and ten I can remember well;
Within the volume of which time I've seen Hours dreadful, and things strange. Shakespeare. Macbeth.
Unoppos'd they either lose their force,
Or wind in volumes to their former course. Dryden.
Behind the gen'ral mends his weary pace,
And silently to his revenge he fails;
So glides some trodden serpent on the grass,
And long behind his wounded volume trails. Dryden.
Thames' fruitful tides,
Slow through the vale in silver volumes play. Fenton.
By

VOL

By the insinuations of these crystals, the volumes of air are driven out of the watery particles, and many of them uniting, form larger volumes, which thereby have a greater force to expand themselves. Cheyne.

3. [Volume, Fr.] A book; so called, because books were anciently rolled upon a staff.

Guyon all this while his book did read,
Ne yet has ended; for it was a great
And ample volume, that doth far exceed My leisure, so long leaves here to repeat. Fairy Queen.

Calmly, I do beseech you—
Aye, as an hostler, that for the poorest piece
Will bear the knave by th' volume. Shakespeare.

I shall not now enlarge on the wrong judgments whereby men mislead themselves. This would make a volume. Locke.

If one short volume could comprize
All that was witty, learn'd and wise:
How would it be esteem'd and read? Swift.

VOLUMINOUS, adj. [from volume.] Extraneous.

1. Consisting of many complications.
The serpent roll'd voluminous and vast. Milton.

2. Consisting in many volumes, or books.
If heav'n write aught of fate, by what the stars
Voluminous, or single characters. Milton.

In their conjunction met, give me to spell.
There is pleasure in doing something new, though never so little, without pestering the world with voluminous transcriptions. Grant's Bills of Mortality.

3. Copious; diffusive.
He did not bear contradiction without much passion, and was too voluminous in discourse. Clarendon.

The most severe reader makes allowances for many rests and nodding-places in a voluminous writer. Spectator, N^o 124.

VOLUMINOUSLY, adv. [from voluminous.] In many volumes or books.

The controversies are hotly managed by the divided schools, and voluminously every where handled. Granville.

VO'UNTARILY, adv. [voluntarius, Fr. from voluntary.] Spontaneously; of one's own accord; without compulsion.

Sith there is no likelihood that ever voluntarily they will seek instruction at our hands, it remaineth that unless we will suffer them to perish, salvation itself must seek them. Hooker.

To be agents voluntarily in our own destruction, is against God and nature. Hooker, b. v.

Self-preservation will oblige a man voluntarily, and by choice, to undergo any less evil, to secure himself but from the probability of an evil incomparably greater. South.

VOLUNTARY, adj. [volontaire, Fr. voluntarius, Lat.]

1. Acting without compulsion; acting by choice.
God did not work as a necessary, but a voluntary agent;
intending before-hand, and decreeing with himself, that which did outwardly proceed from him. Hooker, b. i.

The lottery of my destiny
Bars me the right of voluntary chusing. Shakespeare.

2. Willing; acting with willingness.
Then virtue was no more, her guard away,
She fell to lust a voluntary prey. Pope's Odyssey.

3. Done without compulsion.
Voluntary forbearance denotes the forbearance of an action, consequent to an order of the mind. Locke.

The old duke is banished; the new duke, and three or four loving lords, have put themselves into voluntary exile with him. Shakespeare, As You Like It.

They must have recourse to abstinence, which is but voluntary fasting, and to exercise, which is but voluntary labour. Seed's Sermon.

4. Acting of its own accord; spontaneous.
The public prayers of the people of God in churches thoroughly settled, did never use to be voluntary dictates, proceeding from any man's extemporal wit. Hooker, b. v.

Thoughts which voluntary move Harmonious numbers. Milton.

VO'UNTARY, n. f. [from the adjective.]

1. A volunteer; one who engages in any affair of his own accord.
All th' unsettled humours of the land;
Rash, inconsiderate, fiery voluntaries. Shakespeare.

Ajax was here the voluntary, and you as under an impression. Shakespeare.

The bordering wars were made altogether by voluntaries, upon their own head. Davies's Ireland.

Aids came in partly upon voluntaries, and partly voluntaries
from all parts. Bacon.

2. A piece of musick play'd at will, without any settled rule.
Whistling winds, like organs, play'd,
Until their voluntaries made
The waken'd earth in odours rise. Chaucer.

To be her morning sacrifice,
By a voluntary before the first lesson, we are prepar'd for admission of those divine truths, which we are shortly to receive. Spectator, N^o 630.

VOM

VOLUNTER, n. f. [voluntaire, Fr.] A soldier who enters into the service of his own accord.

Congreve, and the author of the Relapic, being the principals in the dispute, I satisfy them; as for the volunteers, they will find themselves affected with the misfortune of their friends. Collier.

All Asia now was by the ears;
And Gods beat up for volunteers. Prior.

To Greece and Troy.
To VOLUNTEER, v. n. To go for a soldier. A cant word.

Leave off these wagers, for in conscience speaking,
The city needs not your new tricks for breaking;
And if you gallants lose, to all appearing,
You'll want an equipage for volunteering. Dryden.

VOLUTUARY, n. f. [voluptuarius, Fr. voluptuosus, Lat.] A man given up to pleasure and luxury.

Does not the voluntary understand in all the liberties of a loose and a lewd conversation, that he runs the risk of body and soul? L'Estrange.

The parable was intended against the voluntary; men who liv'd like heathens, dissolutely, without regarding any of the restraints of religion. Atterbury.

VOLUPTUOUS, n. f. [voluptuosus, Lat. voluptuosus, Fr.]
Given to excess of pleasure; luxurious.

He them deceives; deceiv'd in his deceit;
Made drunk with drugs of dear voluptuous receipt. Spenser.

If a new sect have not two properties, it will not spread.
The one is the supplanting, or the opposing of authority established; the other is the giving license to pleasures, and a voluptuous life. Bacon.

Thou wilt bring me soon
To that new world of light and bliss, among
The gods, who live at ease, where I shall reign
At thy right hand voluptuous, without end. Milton.

Then swol'n with pride, into the snare I fell
Of fair fallacious looks; venereal trains,
Soft'ned with pleasure, and voluptuous life. Milton.

Speculative atheism subsists only in our speculation; whereas really human nature cannot be guilty of the crime. Indeed a few sensual and voluptuous persons may for a season eclipse this native light of the soul, but can never wholly smother and extinguish it. Bentley's Sermons.

VOLUPTUOUSLY, adv. [from voluptuous.] Luxuriously; with indulgence of excessive pleasure.

Had I a dozen sons, I had rather eleven died nobly for their country, than one voluptuously surfeit out of action. Shaks.

This cannot be done, if my will be so worldly or voluptuously disposed, as never to suffer me to think of them; but perpetually to carry away, and apply my mind to other things. South.

VOLUPTUOUSNESS, n. f. [from voluptuous.] Luxuriolness; ad-dictedness to excess of pleasure.

There's no bottom
In my voluptuousness: your wives, your daughters,
Your matrons, and your maids, could not fill up
The cistern of my lust. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

If he fill'd his vacancy with his voluptuousness,
Full surfeits, and the dryness of his bones
Call on him for't. Shakespeare, Ant. and Cleopatra.

Here where still ev'ning is, not noon nor night;
Where no voluptuousness, yet all delight. Donne.

These sons of Epicurus, for voluptuousness and irreligion, must pass for the only wits of the age. South.

You may be free, unless Your other lord forbids, voluptuousness. Dryden.

VOLUTE, n. f. [volute, Fr.] A member of a column.

That part of the capitals of the Ionick, Corinthian, and Composite orders, which is supposed to represent the bark of trees twisted and turned into spiral lines, or, according to others, the head-dresses of virgins in their long hair. According to Vitruvius, those that appear above the stems in the Corinthian order, are sixteen in every capital, four in the Ionick, and eight in the Composite. These *volute*s are more especially remarkable in the Ionick capital, representing a pillow or cushion laid between the abacus and echinus;
whence that ancient architect calls the volute pulvinus. Harris.

It is said there is an Ionick pillar in the Santa Maria Trans-verere, where the marks of the compass are still to be seen on the volute; and that Palladio learnt from thence the working of that difficult problem. Addison.

VO'LVICA, n. f. [Latin.] An encysted humour in the lungs;
if the ulcer is not broke, it is commonly called a vo'lvica, attended with the same symptoms as an empyema; because the vo'lvica communicating with the vessels of the lungs, must necessarily void some of the putrid matter, and taint the blood. A. Boissac on Diet.

VO'LVIC NUT, n. f. Vo'lvic nut is the nucleus of an East-Indian tree, the wood of which is the lignum colubinum, or snakewood of the shops. It is flat, compressed, and round, of the breadth of a shilling, and about the thickness of a crown-piece. It is certain poison to quadrupeds and birds; and taken taken internally, in small doses, it disturbs the whole human frame, and brings on convulsions. Hill's Mat. Medica.

To VO MIT, v. n. [vomere, Latin.]

1. To cast up the contents of the stomach.
The dog, when he is sick at the stomach, knows his cure, falls to his grass, vomits, and is well. Mere.

To VO MIT, v. a. [vomire, Fr.]

1. To throw up from the stomach.
Hast thou found honey? eat so much as is sufficient, lest thou be filled therewith, and vomit it. Prov. xxv. 16.

The fish vomited out Jonah upon the dry land. Jonah ii.

Vomiting is of use, when the foulness of the stomach requires it. Wiseman's Surgery.

Weak stomachs vomit up the wine that they drink in too great quantities, in the form of vinegar. Arbutnot.

2. To throw up with violence from any hollow.
VO MIT, n. f. [from the verb.]

1. The matter thrown up from the stomach.
He shall cast up the wealth by him devour'd,
Like vomit from his yawning entrails pour'd. Sandys.

2. An emetic medicine; a medicine that causes vomit.
Whether a vomit may be safely given, must be judged by the circumstances; if there be any symptoms of an inflammation of the stomach, a vomit is extremely dangerous. Arbut.

VOMITION, n. f. [from vomit, Lat.] The act or power of vomiting.

How many have saved their lives, by spewing up their debauch? Whereas, if the stomach had wanted the faculty of vomition, they had inevitably died. Grew's Cosmology.

VOMITIVE, adj. [vomitif, Fr.] Emetic; causing vomits.
From this vitriolous quality, mercurius dulcis, and vitriol vomitive, occasion black ejections. Brown's Vulg. Errors.

VOMITORY, adj. [vomitorie, Fr. vomitorium, Lat.] Procuring vomits; emetic.

Since regulus of stibium, or glass of antimony, will communicate to water or wine a purging or vomitory operation, yet the body itself, after iterated infusions, abates not virtue or weight. Brown's Vulg. Errors.

Some have vomited up such bodies as these, namely, thick, short, blunt pins, which, by straining, they vomit up again, or by taking vomitaries privately. Harvey on Consumptions.

VORACIOUS, adj. [vorace, Fr. vorax, Lat.]

1. Greedy to eat; ravenous; cadacious.
So voracious is this humour grown, that it draws in every thing to feed it. Government of the Tongue.

VORACIOUSLY, adv. [from voracious.] Greedily; ravenously.

VORACIOUSNESS, n. f. [voracitas, Fr. voracitas, Lat. from voracity.] Greediness; ravenousness.

He is as well contented with this, as those that with the rarities of the earth pamper their voracities. Sandys.

Creasures by their voracity pernicious, have commonly fewer young. Derham's Physico-Theology.

VORTEX, n. f. In the plural vortices. [Latin.] Any thing whirled round.

If many contiguous vortices of molten pitch were each of them as large as those which some suppose to revolve about the sun and fix'd stars; yet these, and all their parts would, by their tenacity and stiffness, communicate their motion to one another. Newton's Opticks.

Nothing else could impel it, unless the ethereal matter be supposed to be carried about the sun, like a vortex, or whirlpool, as a vehicle to convey it and the rest of the planets. Bentley's Sermons.

The gath'ring number, as it moves along,
Involves a vast involuntary throng;
Who gently drawn, and struggling less and less,
Roll in her vortex, and her power confess. Pope.

VORTICAL, adj. [from vortex.] Having a whirling motion.

If three equal round vessels be filled, the one with cold water, the other with oil, the third with molten pitch, and the liquors be stirred about alike, to give them a vortical motion; the pitch, by its tenacity, will lose its motion quickly; the oil, being less tenacious, will keep it longer; and the water being still less tenacious, will keep it longest, but yet will lose it in a short time. Newton's Opticks.

It is not a magnetical power, nor the effect of a vortical motion; those common attempts towards the explication of gravity. Bentley's Sermons.

VO'VARIET, n. f. [devotus, Lat.] One devoted to any person or thing; one given up by a vow to any service or worship;
votary.

I with a more strict restraint
Upon the fiftihood, the votarists of St. Clare. Shakespeare.

Earth, yield me roots! What is here?
Gold! yellow, glittering, precious gold!
No, gods, I am no idle votarist. Shakespeare.

The grey-hooded ev'n,
Like a sad votarist in palmer's weed,
Rose from the hindmost wheels of Phœbus' wain. Milton.

VOU

VO'TARY, n. f. One devoted, as by a vow, to any particular service, worship, study, or state of life.

Wherefore waste I time to counsel thee?
Thou art a votary to fond desire. Shakespeare.

Thou, faint god of sleep! forget that I Was ever known to be thy votary.

No more my pillow shall thine altar be,
Nor will I offer any more to thee,
Myself a melting sacrifice. Crashaw.

By these means, men worship the idols have been set up in their minds, and stamp the characters of divinity upon abur-dities and errors, become zealous votaries to bulls and mon-kies. Locke.

The enemy of our happiness has his servants and votaries, among those who are called by the name of the son of God. Rogers's Sermons.

How can heav'nly wisdom prove
An instrument to earthly love?
Know't thou not yet, that men commence Thy votaries for want of sense. Swift.

VO'TARY, adj. Consequent to a vow.
Superstition is now so well advanced, that men of the first blood are as firm as butchers by occupation; and votary resolution is made equipollent to custom, even in matter of blood. Bac.

VO'TARESS, n. f. [female of votary.] A woman devoted to any worship or state.

The imperial vot'ress passed on,
In maiden meditation, fancy free. Shakespeare.

His mother was a vot'ress of my order;
And, in the spiced Indian air by night,
Full often she hath gossiped by my side. Shakespeare.

No rotary this vot'ress needs,
Her very syllables are beads. Cleveland.

Thy vot'ress from my tender years I am;
And love, like thee, the woods and sylvan game. Dryden.

What force have pious vows? the queen of love
His sister sends, her vot'ress from above. Pope.

VOTE, n. f. [votum, Lat.] Suffrage; voice given and numbered.
He that joins instruction with delight,
Profit with pleasure, carries all the votes. Roscommon.

How many have no other ground for their tenets, than the supposed honesty or learning of those of the same profession?
as if truth were to be established by the vote of the multitude. Locke.

The final determination arises from the majority of opinions or votes in the assembly, because they ought to be swayed by the superior weight of reason. Watts.

To VO TE, v. a.

1. To chuse by suffrage; to determine by suffrage.
You are not only in the eye and ear of your master; but you are also a favourite, the favourite of the time, and so are in his bosom also; the world hath also voted you, and doth so esteem of you. Bacon.

2. To give by vote.
The parliament voted them one hundred thousand pounds by way of recompence for their sufferings. Swift.

VO'TER, n. f. [from vote.] One who has the right of giving his voice or suffrage.

Elections growing chargeable, the voters, that is, the bulk of the common people, have been universally reduced into bribery, perjury, drunkenness, malice, and slander. Swift.

He hates an action base;
Can sometimes drop a voter's claim,
And give up party to his fame. Swift.

VO'TIVE, adj. [votivus, Lat.] Given by vow.
Such in Isis' temple you may find,
On votive tablets to the life pourtray'd. Dryden.

Venus! take my votive glass;
Since I am not what I was,
What from this day I shall be,
Venus! let me never see. Prior.

To VOUCH, v. a. [voucher, Norman French.]

1. To call to witness; to obtest.
The sun and day are witnesses for me;
Let him who fights unseen relate his own,
And vouch the silent stars and conscious moon. Dryden.

2. To attest; to warrant; to maintain.
You do not give the cheer; the feast is sold
That is not often vouch'd, while 'tis making 'Tis given with welcome. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

The consistency of the discourse, and the pertinency of it to the design he is upon, vouches it worthy of our great apostle. Locke.

They made him ashamed to vouch the truth of the relation, and afterwards to credit it. Atterbury.

To VOUCH, v. n. To bear witness; to appear as a witness;
to give testimony.

He declares he will not believe her, until the elector of Hanover shall vouch for the truth of what she hath so folemnly affirmed. Swift.

Vouch.

VOW

Vouch. n. f. [from the verb.] Warrant; attestation.
What praise couldst thou bestow on a deserving woman indeed? one that in the authority of her merit, did justly put on the vouch of very malice itself? Shakep. Othello.
VOUCHER. n. f. [from vouch.] One who gives witness to any thing.
Better to starve,
Than crave the hire which first we do deserve:
Why in this wolfish gown should I stand here,
To beg of Hob and Dick, that do appear,
Their needful voucher? Shakep. Coriolanus.
The stamp is a mark, and a public voucher, that a piece of such denomination is of such a weight, and of such a fineness, i. e. has so much silver in it. Locke.
All the great writers of that age stand up together as vouchers for one another's reputation. Spectator, N. 253.
I have added nothing to the malice or absurdity of them, which it behoves me to declare, since the vouchers themselves will be so soon lost. Pope.
TO VOUCHSAFE. v. a. [vouch and safe.]
1. To permit any thing to be done without danger.
2. To condescend to grant.
He grew content to mark their speeches, then marvel at such wit in shepherds, after to like their company, and lastly to vouchsafe conference. Sidney.
Shall I vouchsafe your worship a word or two? — Two thousand, fair woman, and I'll vouchsafe thee hearing. Shakep. Cymbeline.
But if the sense of touch seem such delight
Beyond all other, think the same vouchsafed.
To cattle and each beast. Milton.
It is not said by the apostle, that God vouchsafed to the heathens the means of salvation; and yet I will not affirm that God will save none of those, to whom the found of the gospel never reached. South's Sermons.
TO VOUCHSAFE. v. n. To deign; to condescend; to yield.
Do I not see Zelmane, who does not think a thought which is not first weigh'd by wisdom and virtue? doth not the vouchsafe to love me with like ardour? Sidney, b. ii.
Vouchsafe, divine perfection of a woman,
Of these supposed crimes to give me leave
By circumstance but to acquit myself. Shakep. Rich. III.
Vouchsafe, illustrious Ormond, to behold
What pow'r the charms of beauty had of old. Dryden.
VOUCHSAFE. n. f. [from vouchsafe.] Grant; condescension.
The infinite superiority of God's nature, places a vast disparity betwixt his greatest communicated vouchsafements, and his boundless, and therefore to his creatures incommunicable perfections. Boyle.
Vow. n. f. [vœus, Fr. votum, Lat.]
1. Any promise made to a divine power; an act of devotion, by which some part of life, or some part of possessions is consecrated to a particular purpose.
The gods are deaf to hot and peevish vows;
They are polluted offerings. Shakep. Cymbeline.
If you take that vow and that wish to be all one, you are mistaken; a wish is a far lower degree than a vow. Hammond.
She vows for his return, with vain devotion, pays. Dryd.
2. A solemn promise, commonly used for a promise of love or matrimony.
By all the vows that ever men have broke,
In number more than ever women spoke.
Those who wear the woodbine on their brow,
Were knights of love, who never broke their vow;
Firm to their plighted faith. Dryden.
TO VOW. v. a. [vouer, Fr. vovœre, Lat.] To consecrate by a solemn dedication; to give to a divine power.
David often voweth unto God the sacrifice of praise and thanksgiving in the congregation. Hooker.
To Master Harvey, upon some special consideration, I have vowed this my labour. Spenser.
Vow and pay unto the Lord. Pf. lxxvi.
When we have not only vowed, but delivered them over into the possession of Almighty God, for the maintenance of his public worship, and the ministers thereof, they are not now arbitrable, nor to be revoked. Spelman.
Whoever fees these irreligious men,
With burden of a sickness, weak and faint,
But hears them talking of religion then,
And vowing of their soul to ev'ry saint. Davies.
This plant Latinus, when his town he wall'd,
Then found, and from the tree Laurentum call'd:
And last, in honour of his new abode,
He vow'd the laurel to the laurel's god. Dryden.
TO VOW. v. n. To make vows or solemn promises.
Dost see how unregarded now
That piece of beauty passes?
There was a time, when I did vow
To that alone: but mark the fate of faces. Suckling.

UP

VO'WEL. n. f. [voyelle, Fr. vocalis, Lat.] A letter which can be uttered by itself.
I distinguish letters into vowels and consonants, yet not wholly upon their reason, that a vowel may be sounded alone, a consonant not without a vowel; which will not be found all true; for many of the consonants may be sounded alone, and some joined together without a vowel, as bl. fl. and as we pronounce the latter syllable of people, rifle. Hollas.
Virgil makes the two vowels meet without an elision. Breane.
VOWFE'LOW. n. f. [vow and fellow.] One bound by the same vow.
Who are the votaries,
That are vowfellows with this virtuous king? Shakep.
VO'YAGE. n. f. [voyage, Fr.]
1. A travel by sea.
Guyon forward 'gan his voyage make,
With his black palmer, that him guided still. Fairy Queen.
Our ships went sundry voyages, as well to the pillars of Hercules, as to other parts in the Atlantick and Mediterranean seas.
This great man acted like an able pilot in a long voyage; contented to sit in the cabin when the winds were allay'd, but ready to refuse the helm when the storm arose. Prior.
2. Course; attempt; undertaking. A low phrase.
If he shou'd intend his voyage towards my wife, I wou'd turn her loose to him; and what he gets more of her than sharp words, let it lie on my head. Shakep. Cymbeline.
If you make your voyage upon her, and prevail, I am no further your enemy. Shakep. Cymbeline.
3. The practice of travelling.
All nations have interknowledge of one another, by voyage into foreign parts, or strangers that come to them. Bacon.
TO VO'YAGE. v. n. [voyager, Fr. from the noun.] To travel by sea.
For voyaging to learn the direful art,
To taint with deadly drugs the barbed dart;
Thus refus'd 'timpair the baneful trust. Pope's Odyssey.
TO VO'YAGE. v. a. To travel; to pass over.
I with pain
Voyag'd th' unreal, vast, unbounded deep
Of horrible confusion. Milton's Par. Lost.
VO'YAGER. n. f. [voyageur, Fr. from voyage.] One who travels by sea.
Disdain not in thy constant travelling
To do as other voyagers, and make Some turns into less creeks, and wisely take Froth water at the Heliconian spring.
How comfortable this is, voyagers can best tell. Dome.
Deny your vessels, ye deny in vain;
A private voyager I pass the main. Pope's Odyssey.
UP. adv. [up, Saxon; op, Dutch and Danish.]
1. Aloft; on high; not down.
From those two Mytilene brethren, admire the wonderful changes of worldly things, now up now down, as if the life of man were not of much more certainty than a stage play. Knoles's Hist. of the Turks.
Thither his course he bends; but up or down,
By center, or eccentric, hard to tell,
Or longitude. Milton.
2. Out of bed; in the state of being risen from rest.
Helen was not up? was she? Shakep. Cymbeline.
His chamber being commonly stived with suiters, when he was up, he gave his legs, arms, and breast to his servants to dress him; his eyes to his letters, and ears to petitioners. Wotton.
3. In the state of being risen from a feat.
Upon his first rising, a general whisper ran among the country people, that Sir Roger was up. Addison.
4. From a state of decumbiture or concealment.
Up rose the sun, and up rose Emily;
Address'd her early steps to Cynthia's fane. Dryden.
5. In a state of being built.
Up with my tent; here will I lie to-night;
But where to-morrow I — well, all's one for that. Shakep.
6. Above the horizon.
As soon as the sun is up, set upon the city. Judges ix.
7. To a state of advancement.
Till we have wrought ourselves up into this degree of christian indifference, we are in bondage. Atterbury.
8. In a state of exaltation.
Those that were up themselves, kept others low;
Those that were low themselves held others hard;
Ne suffered them to rise, or greater grow. Fairy Queen.
Henry the fifth is crown'd; up vanity!
Down royal state! all you sage counsellors hence. Shakep.
9. In a state of climbing.
In a state of infurrection.
The gentle archbishop of York is up. Shakep. Hen. IV.
With well-appointed powers.
Rebels there are up,
And put the Englishmen unto the sword. Shakep. Hen. IV.

UPB

Thou hast fir'd me; my soul's up in arms,
And mans each part about me. Dryden.
11. In a state of being increased, or raised.
Grief and passion are like floods raised in little brooks by a sudden rain; they are quickly up, and if the concernment be pour'd unexpectedly in upon us, it overflows us. Dryden.
12. From a remoter place, coming to any person or place.
As a boat was whetting his teeth, up comes a fox to him. L'Estrange.
13. From younger to elder years.
I am ready to die from my youth up. Pf. lxxxviii.
14. Up and down. Dispersedly; here and there.
Abundance of them are seen scattered up and down like so many little islands when the tide is low. Addison.
15. Up and down. Backward and forward.
Our desire is, in this present controversy, not to be carried up and down with the waves of uncertain arguments, but rather positively to lead on the minds of the simpler sort by plain and easy degrees, till the very nature of the thing itself do make manifest what is truth. Hooker, b. v.
The skipping king he rambl'd up and down,
With shallow jesters. Shakep. Cymbeline.
Up and down he traverses his ground;
Now wards a felling blow, now strikes again:
Then nimble shifts a thrust, then lends a wound;
Now back he gives, then rushes on again.
Thou and death
Shall dwell at ease, and up and down unseen
Wing silently the buxom air.
On this windy sea of land, the fiend
Walk'd up and down alone, bent on his prey.
What a miserable life dost thou lead, says a dog to a lion, to run starving up and down thus in woods. L'Estrange.
— She moves! life wanders up and down
Through all her face, and lights up every charm. Addison.
16. Up to. To an equal height with.
Tantalus was punished with the rage of an eternal thirst, and set up to the chin in water, that fled from his lips whenever he attempted to drink it. Addison.
17. Up to. Adequately to.
The wisest men in all ages have lived up to the religion of their country, when they saw nothing in it opposite to morality. Addison.
They are determined to live up to the holy rule, by which they have oblig'd themselves to walk. Atterbury.
We must not only mortify all these passions that solicit us, but we must learn to do well, and act up to the positive precepts of our duty. Rogers's Sermons.
18. Up with. A phrase that signifies the act of raising any thing to give a blow.
She, quick and proud, and who did Pas despise,
Up with her fist, and took him on the face;
Another time, quoth she, become more wise:
Thus Pas did kiss her hand with little grace. Stanley.
19. It is added to verbs, implying some accumulation, or increase.
If we could number up those prodigious swarms that settled in every part of the Campania of old Rome, they would amount to more than can be found in any fix parts of Europe of the same extent. Addison's Remarks on Italy.
20. Up, interject.
21. A word exhorting to rise from bed.
Up, up! cries gluttony, 'tis break of day;
Go drive the deer, and drag the finny prey. Pope.
22. A word of exhortation, exciting or rousing to action.
Up then, Melpomene, the mournful muse of nine;
Such cause of mourning never hadst afore;
Up, grisly ghosts; and up my rueful rime;
Matter of mirth now shalt thou have no more.
But up, and enter now into full bliss.
Up, up, for honour's sake; twelve legions wait you,
And long to call you chief. Dryden.
23. Up, prep. From a lower to a higher part; not down.
In going up a hill, the knees will be most weary; in going down, the thighs: for that in lifting the feet, when a man goeth up the hill, the weight of the body beareth most upon the knees, and in going down, upon the thighs. Bacon.
TO UPB'AR. v. a. upbore; part. pass. upborn. [up and bear.]
1. To sustain aloft; to support in elevation.
Upborn with indefatigable wings. Milton.
Rang'd in a line the ready racers stand,
Start from the goal, and vanish o'er the strand:
Swift as on wings of wind, upborn they fly,
And drifts of rising dust involve the sky. Pope.
2. To raise aloft.
This with pray'r,
Or one short sigh of human breath, upborn, Ev'n to the seat of God. Milton's Par. Lost.
A monstrous wave upbore
The chief, and dash'd him on the craggy shore. Pope.

UPC

3. To support from falling.
Vital pow'rs 'gan wax both weak and wan,
For want of food and sleep; which two upbear,
Like weighty pillars, this frail life of man. Fairy Queen.
TO UPB'AR. v. a. [upbeare, upbebran, Saxon.]
1. To charge contemptuously with any thing disgraceful.
The fathers, when they were upbraided with that defect, comforted themselves with the meditation of God's most gracious nature, who did not therefore the less accept of their hearty affection. Hooker, b. v.
It seem'd in me
But as an honour snatch'd with boist'rous hand,
And I had many living to upbraid
My gain of it by their assillances,
Which daily grew to quarrel. Shakep. Hen. IV.
If you refuse your aid, yet do not Upbraid us with our distress. Shakep. Coriolanus.
Vain man! how long wilt thou thy God upbraid?
And, like the roaring of a furious wind,
Thus vent the vile distemper of thy mind? Sandys.
How cunningly the forcerels displays
Her own transgressions, to upbraid me mine. Milton.
'Tis a general complaint against you, and I must upbraid
you with it, that because you need not write, you will not. Dryden.
You may the world of more defects upbraid,
That other works by nature are unmade;
That she did never at her own expence
A palace rear. Blackmore.
2. To object as matter of reproach.
Those that have been bred together, are more apt to envy their equals when raised: for it doth upbraid unto them their own fortunes, and pointeth at them. Bacon.
Any of these, without regarding the pains of churchmen, grudge or upbraid to them those small remains of ancient piety, which the rapacity of some ages has scarce left. Sprat.
May they not justly to our climes upbraid,
Shortness of night, and penury of shade. Prior.
3. To urge with reproach.
I have too long born
Your blunt upbraidings, and your bitter scoffs. Shakep.
He that knowingly commits an ill, has the upbraidings of his own conscience. Decay of Piety.
4. To reproach on account of a benefit received from the reproacher.
Ev'ry hour
He flashes into one gross crime or other;
His knights grow riotous, and he himself upbraids us
On ev'ry trifle. Shakep. K. Lear.
If any lack wisdom, let him ask of God, that giveth liberally, and upbraideth not. Ja. i. 5.
Be ashamed of upbraiding speeches before friends: and after thou hast given upbraid not. Ecclus. xli. 22.
5. To bring reproach upon; to shew faults by being in a state of comparison.
Ah, my son, how evil fits it me to have such a son, and how much doth thy kindness upbraid my wickedness? Sidney.
The counsel which I cannot take,
Instead of healing, but upbraids my weakness. Addison.
6. To treat with contempt. Not in use.
There also was that mighty monarch laid,
Low under all, yet above all in pride;
That name of native fire did foul upbraid,
And would, as Ammon's son, be magnify'd. Fairy Queen.
UPB'RAIDINGLY. adv. By way of reproach.
The time was, when men would learn and study good things, not envy those that had them. Then men were had in price for learning; now letters only make men vile. He is upbraidingly called a poet, as if it were a contemptible nickname. B. Johnson.
TO UPB'AR. v. a. [A word formed from upbraid by Spenser, for the sake of a rhyming termination.] To shame.
Vile knight,
That knights and knighthood dost with shame upbraid,
And shew'st th' ensample of thy childish might,
With silly, weak, old women thus to fight. Spenser.
UPB'ROUGHT. part. pass. of upbring. Educated; nurtured.
Divinely wrought,
And of the brood of angels, heav'nly born,
And with the crew of blessed faints upbrought,
Each of which did her with her gifts adorn. Spenser.
UPH'AND. adj. [up and hand.] Lifted by the hand.
The uphand sledge is used by underworkmen, when the work is not of the largest, yet requires help to batter. They use it with both their hands before them, and seldom lift their hammer higher than their head. Moxon's Mech. Exerc.
UP'CAST. [Participle from to cast up. The verb to upcast is not in use.] Thrown upwards.
Beasts with upcast eyes forsake their shade,
And gaze, as if I were to be obey'd. Dryden.

UPCAST.

UPH

Old Saturn, here with upcast eyes, Beheld his abdicated skies. Addison.
UPCAST. n. f. A term of bowling; a throw; a cast.
Was there ever man had such luck? when I kiss'd the jack, upon an upcast to be hit away! Shakefp. Cymbeline.
TO UPGATHER. v. a. [up and gather.] To contract.
Himself he close upgather'd more and more
Into his den, that his deceitful train,
By his there being might not be bewraid,
Ne any noise, ne any question made. Spenser.
UPHELD. pret. and part. pass. of uphold. Maintained; sustained.
He who reigns
Monarch in heav'n, 'till then, as one secure,
Sat on his throne, upheld by old repute. Milton.
UPHILL. adj. [up and hill.] Difficult; like the labour of climbing an hill.
What an uphill labour must it be to a learner, who has those first rudiments to master at twenty years of age, which others are taught at ten. Clarissa.
TO UPHOLD. v. a. [up and hold.] To treasure; to store;
to accumulate in private places.
Heaps of huge words upboarded hideously
With horrid found, though having little sense,
They think to be chief praise of poetry;
And thereby wanting due intelligence,
Have marr'd the face of goodly poeie,
And made a monster of their fantasie. Spenser.
If thou hast upboarded in thy life
Extorted treasure, in the womb of earth,
Speak of it. Shakespeare.
TO UPHOLD. v. a. preter. upheld; and part. pass. upheld, and upholden. [up and hold.]
1. To lift on high.
The mournful train with groans and hands upheld, Befought his pity. Dryden.
2. To support; to sustain; to keep from falling.
While life upholds this arm,
This arm upholds the house of Lancaster. Shakefp.
This great man found no means to continue and uphold his ill-purchased greatness, but by rejecting the English laws, and assuming, in lieu thereof, the barbarous customs of the Irish. Davies's Ireland.
Poetry and painting were upheld by the strength of imagination. Dryden's Dufresnoy.
3. To keep from declension.
There is due from the judge to the advocate some commendation, where causes are fair pleaded; for that upholds in the client the reputation of his council, and beats down in him the conceit of his cause. Bacon.
Never was a time, when the interposition of the magistrate was more necessary, to secure the honour of religion, and uphold the authority of those great principles, by which his own authority is best upheld. Atterbury.
4. To support in any state of life.
Many younger brothers have neither lands nor means to uphold themselves. Raleigh.
5. To continue; to keep from defeat.
Divers, although peradventure not willing to be yoked with elderships, yet were contented to uphold opposition against bishops, not without greater hurt to the course of their whole proceedings. Hooker.
6. To keep from being lost.
Faulconbridge,
In spite of spite, alone upholds the day. Shakespeare.

I thought To smoothe your passage, and to soften death: For I would have you, when you upward move, Speak kindly of me to our friends above. Dryden.

In sheets of rain the sky descends, And ocean swell'd with waters upwards tends; One rising, falling one; the heav'n and sea Meet at their confines, in the middle way. Dryden.

A man on a cliff, is at liberty to leap twenty yards downwards into the sea, not because he has power to do the contrary action, which is to leap twenty yards upwards, for that he cannot do; but he is therefore free, because he has a power to leap, or not to leap. Locke.

2. Towards heav'n and God. Looking inward, we are stricken dumb; looking upward, we speak and prevail. Hooker, b. v.

3. With respect to the higher part. Dagon, sea-monster! upward man, And downward fish. Milton's Par. Lost, b. i.

4. More than; with tendency to a higher or greater number. Their counsel must seem very unfeasonable, who advise men now to suspect that, wherewith the world hath had, by their own accounts, twelve hundred years acquaintance and upwards, enough to take away suspicion. Hooker, b. v.

I have been your wife in this obedience Upward of twenty years; and have been blest With many children by you. Shakespeare, Hen. VIII.

5. Towards the source. Be Homer's works your study; Thence form your judgment, thence your notions bring, And trace the mules upward to their spring. Pope.

TO UPWARD. v. a. pret. and pass. upwound. [up and wind.] To convolve. As the lay upon the dirty ground, Her huge long tail her den all overspread; Yet was in knots and many boughts upwound. Fa. Queen.

URBANITY. n. f. [urbanité, Fr. urbanitas, Lat.] Civility; elegance; politeness; merriment; facetiousness. A useful severity banishes all urbanity, whose harmless condition is consistent with religion. Brown's Vulg. Errors.

Railery is the sauce of civil entertainment; and without some such tincture of urbanity, good humour falters. L'Estr.

Moral doctrine, and urbanity, or well-mannered wit, constitute the Roman satire. Dryden.

URCHIN. n. f. [beureuchin, Armorick; erimaceus, Lat.] 1. A hedge-hog. Urchins shall, for that vast of night that they may work, All exercise on thee. Shakespeare's Tempest.

A thousand fiends, a thousand hissing snakes, Ten thousand swelling toads, as many urchins, Would make such fearful and confused cries, As any mortal body, hearing it, Would straight fall mad. Shakespeare, Titus Andronicus.

That nature designs the preservation of the more infirm creatures, by the defensive armour it hath given them, is demonstrable in the common hedge-hog, or urchin. Ray.

URG

2. A name of slight anger to a child. Pleas'd Cupid heard, and check'd his mother's pride; And who's blind now, mamma? the urchin cry'd. 'Tis Cloe's eye, and cheek, and lip, and breast: Friend Howard's genius fancy'd all the rest. Prior.

 Of what the land usurp'd upon the sea. Dryden.
 Who next usurps, will a just prince appear,
 So much your ruin will his reign endear. Dryden.

U T I

Struggling in vain, impatient of her load,
 And lab'ring underneath the pond'rous God;
 The more she strove to shake him from her breast,
 With more and far superior force he press'd,
 Commands his entrance, and, without controul,
Usurps her organs, and inspires her soul. Dryden.
 Who's this, that dares usurp
 The guards and habit of Numidia's prince? Addison's Cato.
USURPA'TION, [usurpation, Fr. from usurp.] Forcible, unjust, illegal seizure or possession.
 The Piercies,
 Finding his usurpation most unjust,
 Endeavour'd my advancement to the throne. Shakespeare.
 Succeeding kings recovery of their right from unjust usurpations, shall never be prejudiced by any act of mine. K. Char.
 To raise a tempest on the sea was usurpation on the prerogative of Neptune, who had given him no leave. Dryden.
 O baseness to support a tyrant throne,
 And crush your freeborn brethren of the world!
 Nay, to become a part of usurpation,
 To espouse the tyrant's person and her crimes. Dryden.
 Whatever opposition was made to the usurpations of K. James, proceeded altogether from the church of England. Swift.
USURPER, n. f. [from usurp.] One who seizes or possesses that to which he has no right. It is generally used of one who excludes the right heir from the throne.
 Ever since he hath continued his first usurped power,
 And now exacteth upon all men what he list: so that now to subdue or expel an usurper, should be no unjust enterprise, but a restitution of ancient right unto the crown. Spenser.
 Richard duke of York,
 Was rightful heir unto the English crown;
 And that your majesty was an usurper. Shakespeare.
 But this usurper, his encroachment proud,
 Stays not on man; to God his tow'r intends Siege and defiance. Milton.
 Few usurpers to the shades descend
 By a dry death, or with a quiet end.
 He griev'd, the land he freed should be oppress'd,
 And he less for it than usurpers do. Dryden.
USURPINGLY, adv. [from usurp.] Without just claim.
 Lay aside the sword,
 Which sways usurpingly these several titles,
 And put the same into young Arthur's hand, Thy right royal sovereign. Shakespeare's K. John.
USURY, [usuræ, Fr. usura, Lat.]
 1. Money paid for the use of money; interest.
 He that high does sit, and all things see,
 With equal eyes, their merits to relore;
 Behold, what ye this day have done for me,
 And what I cannot quit, requite with usury. Fairy Queen.
 The wisest day is come at last,
 That shall, for all the pains and sorrows past,
 Pay to her usury of long delight. Spenser.
 Our angles are like money put to usury; they may thrive, though we sit still and do nothing. Walton's Angler.
 What he borrows from the antients, he repays with usury of his own; in coin as good, and almost as universally valuable. Dryden's Dedication to Juvenal.
 2. The practice of taking interest. It is commonly used with some reproach.
Usury bringeth the treasure of a realm into few hands: for the usurer being at certainties, and others at uncertainties, at the end, most of the money will be in the box. Bacon.
UTENSIL, n. f. [utensile, Fr. utensile, low Lat.] An instrument for any use, such as the vessels of the kitchen, or tools of a trade.
 Burn but his books; he has brave utensils,
 Which, when he has a house, he'll deck withal. Shaksp.
 Mules after these, camels and dromedaries,
 And waggons fraught with utensils of war. Milton.
 Tithes and lands given to God are never; and plate, vestments, and other sacred utensils, are seldom consecrated. South.
 The springs of life their former vigour feel;
 Such zeal he had for that vile utensil. Garrick's Dispensary.
UTERINE, adj. [uterin, Fr. uterinus, Lat.] Belonging to the womb.
 In hot climates, and where the uterine parts exceed in heat, by the coldness of some simple, they may be reduced unto a conceive constitution. Brown's Vulgar Errours.
 The vessels of the interior glandulous substance of the womb, are contorted with turnings and meanders, that they might accommodate themselves without danger of rupture to the necessary extension of the uterine substance. Ray.
UTERUS, n. f. [Latin.] The womb.
UTILITY, n. f. [utilité, Fr. utilitas, Lat.] Usefulness; profit; convenience; advantage.
 Those things which have long gone together, are confederate; whereas new things piece not so well; but though they help by their utility, yet they trouble by their inconstancy. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
 Should

U T T

Should we blindly obey the restraints of physicians and astrologers, we should confine the utility of physick unto a very few days. Brown's Vulgar Errours.
 M. Zulichem desired me that I would give a relation of the cure of the gout, that might be made publick, as a thing which might prove of common utility to so great numbers as were subject to that disease. Temple.
UTIS, n. f. A word which probably is corrupted, at least, is not now understood.
 Then here will be old utis: it will be an excellent stratagem. Shakespeare's Hen. IV.
UTMOST, adj. [utmost, Saxon; from utcep.]
 1. Extreme; placed at the extremity.
 Much like a subtle spider, which doth sit
 In middle of her web, which spreadeth wide;
 If ought do touch the utmost thread of it,
 She feels it instantly on ev'ry side. Davies.
 As far remov'd from God and light of heav'n,
 As from the center thrice to th' utmost pole. Milton.
 I went
 To view the utmost limits of the land. Dryden.
 2. Being in the highest degree.

 There could not be any other estimate made of the loss, than by the utter refusal of the auxiliary regiments of London and Kent to march farther. Clarendon, b. viii.
 They feel fewer corporal pains, and are utter strangers to all those anxious thoughts which disquiet mankind. Atterbury.
TO UTTER, v. a. [from the adjective; to make publick, or let out; palam facere.]
 1. To speak; to pronounce; to express.
 Men spake not with the instruments of writing, neither writ with the instruments of speech; and yet things recorded with the one, and uttered with the other, may be preached well enough with both. Hooker.
 These very words I've heard him utter. Shakespeare.
 There's more gold: but, firrah,
 We lay the dead as well. Bring it to that,
 The gold I give thee will I melt, and pour Down thy ill-uttering throat. Shakespeare.
 Conceiving and uttering from the heart words of falsehood. Isa. lix. 13.
 Shall not they teach thee and tell thee, and utter words out of their heart? Job viii. 10.
 Who knows but his poor, bleeding heart,
 Amidst its agonies, remember'd Marcia,
 And the last words he utter'd, call'd me cruel! Addison.

 From point to point discours'd his voyage. Fa. Queen.
 2. [Ouvrance, Fr.] Extremity; terms of extreme hostility.
 Of him I gather'd honour;
 Which he to seek of me again perforce,
 Behoves me keep at utterance. Shaksp. Cymbeline.
 Mine eternal jewel
 Giv'n the common enemy of man,
 To make them kings; the seed of Banquo kings!
 Rather than so, come, fate, into the list,
 And champion me to th' utterance. Shaksp. Macbeth.
 3. Vocal expression; emission from the mouth.
 'Till Adam, though no less than Eve abash'd,
 At length gave utterance to these words constrain'd. Milton.
 Speaking is a sensible expression of the notions of the mind, by several discriminations of utterance of voice, used as signs, having by content several determinate significancies. Holder.
 There have been some inventions, which have been able for the utterance of articulate sounds, as the speaking of certain words. Wilkins's Math. Magic.

TO WANT. v. a. [pana, Saxon.]
 1. To be without something fit or necessary.
 Want no money, Sir John; you shall want none. Shaksp.
 A man to whom God hath given riches, so that he wanteth nothing for his soul of all that he desireth, yet God giveth him not power to eat thereof. Ecc. vi. 2.
 2. To be defective in something.
 Smells do most of them want names. Locke.
 Nor can this be,
 But by fulfilling that which thou didst want,
 Obedience to the law. Milton.
 3. To fall short of; not to contain.
 Nor think, though men were none,
 That heav'n wou'd want spectators, God want praise. Mit.
 4. To be without; not to have.
 By descending from the thrones above,
 Those happy places, thou hast design'd a while
 To want, and honour these. Milton's Par. Lost.
 How loth I am to have recourse to rites
 So full of horror, that I once rejoice
 I want the use of fight.
 The unhappy never want enemies. Dryden and Lee's Oedipus.
 5. To need; to have need of; to lack.
 It hath caus'd a great irregularity in our calendar, and wants to be reformed, and the equinox to be rightly computed. Holler.
 God, who sees all things intuitively, does not want helps; he neither stands in need of logic, nor uses it. Baker.
 6. To wish for; to long for.
 Down I come, like glitt'ring Phaeton,
Wanting the manage of unruly jades. Shaksp.
 The sylvans to their shades retire,
 Those very shades and streams new shades and streams require,
 And want a cooling breeze of wind to fan the raging fire. Dry.
 What wants my son? for know
 My son thou art, and I must call thee so. Addison's Ovid.
 Men who want to get a woman into their power, seldom scruple the means. Clarissa.
TO WANT. v. n.
 1. To be wanted; to be improperly absent; not to be in sufficient quantity.
 Nor did there want cornice or freeze. Milton.
 Finds wealth where 'tis, bestows it where it wants.
 Cities in deserts, woods in cities plants. Denham.
 We have the means in our hands, and nothing but the application of them is wanting. Addison.
 As in bodies, thus in souls, we find What wants in blood and spirits, swell'd with winds. Pope.
 The design, the disposition, the manners, and the thoughts, are all before it; where any of those are wanting, or imperfect, so much wants in the imitation of human life. Dryden.
 2. To fail; to be deficient.
 Not shall I to the work thou enterprisest
 Be wanting, but afford thee equal aid. Milton.
 Though

W A N

Though England is not wanting in a learned nobility, yet unhappy circumstances have confined me to a narrow choice. Dryden's Dedication to Lord Cliford.
 Whatever fortune, good or bad betide,
 No time shall find me wanting to my truth. Dryden.
 Religion will never be without enemies, nor those enemies be wanting in endeavours to expose it to the contempt of mankind. Rogers's Sermons.
 Several are against his severe usage of you, and would be glad of an occasion to convince the rest of their error, if you will not be wanting to yourself. Swift.
 3. To be missed; to be not had.
 Twelve, wanting one, he flew,
 My brethren: I alone survive'd. Dryden.
 Granivorous animals have a long colon and caecum, which in carnivorous are wanting. Arbutnot on Aliments.
WANT. n. f.
 1. Need.
 It infers the good
 By thee communicated, and our want. Milton.
 Parents should distinguish between the wants of fancy, and those of nature. Locke.
 2. Deficiency.
 This proceeded not from any want of knowledge, but of judgment. Dryden.
 One objection to Civita Vecchia, is, that the air is not wholesome; this proceeds from want of inhabitants. Addison.
 The blood flows through the vessels, by the excess of the force of the heart above the incumbent pressure, which in fat people is excessive; and as want of a due quantity of motion of the fluids increaseth fat, the disease is the cause of itself. Arbutnot on Aliments.
 3. The state of not having.
 You shall have no reason to complain of me, for want of a generous disdain of this world. Pope.
 4. Poverty; penury; indigence.
 Nothing is so hard for those who abound in riches, as to conceive how others can be in want. Swift.
 5. [pana, Saxon.] A mole.
WANTON. n. f. [I his word is derived by Minshew from want one, a man or woman that wants a companion. This etymology, however odd, Juvius silently adopts. Skinner, who had more acuteness, cannot forbear to doubt it, but offers nothing better.]
 1. Lascivious; libidinous; lecherous; lustful.
 Thou art froward by nature, enemy to peace,
 Lascivious, wanton; more than well becomes A man of thy profession. Shaksp. Hen. VI.
 Entic'd to do him wanton rites. Milton.
 2. Licentious; dissolute.
 My pteous joys,
Wanton in fulness, seek to hide themselves
 In drops of sorrow. Shaksp. Macbeth.
 Men grown wanton by prosperity,
 Study'd new arts of luxury and ease. Roscommon.
 3. Frolicsome; gay; sportive; airy.
 As flies to wanton boys, we are to th' gods:
 They kill us for their sport. Shaksp. K. Lear.
 Note a wild and wanton herd,
 Or race of youthful and unhandled colts,
 Fetching mad bounds. Shaksp. Merch. of Venice.
 Time drives the flocks from field to fold;
 The flow'rs do fade, and wanton fields
 To wayward winter reckoning yields.
 How eagerly ye follow my disgrace,
 As if it fed ye; and how sleek and wanton
 Y' appear, in every thing may bring my ruin. Shaksp.
 4. Loose; unrestrained.
 How does your tongue grow wanton in her praise! Addison.
 5. Quick, and irregular of motion.
 6. Luxurious; superfluous.
 What we by day lop overgrown,
 One night or two, with wanton growth derides,
 Tending to wild.
 Women richly gay in gems and wanton drefs. Milton.
 7. Not regular; turned fortuitously.
 The quaint mazes in the wanton green,
 For want of tread are undistinguishable. Milton.
WANTON. n. f.
 1. A lascivious person; a strumpet; a whoremonger.
 An old wanton will be doating upon women, when he can scarce see without spectacles. South's Sermons.
 To lip a wanton in a secure couch,
 And to suppose her chaste. Shaksp. Othello.
 2. A trifier; an insignificant flatterer.
 Shall a beardless boy,
 A cocker'd, sly wanton brave your fields,
 Mocking the air with colours idly spread,
 And find no check? Shaksp. K. John.
 Pals with your best violence;
 I am afraid you make a wanton of me. Shaksp. Hamlet.

W A R

3. A word of slight endearment.
 Peace, my wantons; he will do,
 More than you can aim unto. B. Johnson.
TO WANTON. v. n. [from the noun.]
 1. To play lasciviously.
 He from his guards and midnight tent,
 Diguis'd o'er hills and valleys went,
 To wanton with the sprightly dame,
 And in his pleasure lost his fame. Prior.
 2. To revel; to play.
 Oh! I heard him wanton in his praise;
 Speak things of him might charm the ears. Orway.
 Nature here
Wanton'd as in her prime, and play'd at will Her virgin fancies. Milton.
 O ye muses! deign your blest retreat,
 Where Horace wantons at your spring,
 And Pindar sweeps a bolder string. Fenton.
 3. To move nimbly, and irregularly.
WANTONLY. adv. [from wanton.] Lasciviously; frolicsome-ly; gayly; sportively; carelessly.
 Thou dost but try how far I can forbear,
 Nor art that monster which thou wouldst appear:
 But do not wantonly my passion move,
 I pardon nothing that relates to love. Dryden.
WANTONNESS. n. f. [from wanton.]
 1. Lasciviousness; lechery.
 The spirit of wantonness is fear'd out of him. Shaksp.
 Bulls and goats bled apace; but neither the violence of the one, nor the wantonness of the other, ever died a victim at any of their altars. South.
 2. Sportiveness; frolic; humour.
 When I was in France,
 Young would be as sad as night,
 Only for wantonness. Shaksp. K. John.
 Love, rais'd on beauty, will like that decay;
 Our hearts may bear its slender chain a day:
 As flow'ry bands in wantonness are worn,
 A morning's pleasure, and an evening torn. Pope.
 3. Licentiousness; negligence of restraint.
 The tumults threatened to abuse all acts of grace, and turn them into wantonness. K. Charles.
 Till wantonness and pride
 Raise out of friendship hostile deeds in peace. Milton.
WANTWIT. n. f. [want and wit.] A fool; an idiot.
 Such a wantwit sadness makes of me,
 That I have much ado to know myself. Shaksp.
WANTY. n. f. [I know not whence derived.] A broad girth of leather, by which the load is bound upon the horse.
 A panel and wanty, pack-saddle and ped,
 With line to fetch litter. Tusser.
WAPED. adj. [Of this word I know not the original, except that to wape, to flock, or deject, is found in spenser; from which the meaning may be gathered.] Dejected; crushed by misery.
 His makes the waped widow wed again. Shaksp.
WAPENTAKE. n. f. [from wapen, Saxon, and take, wapentakium, wapentagium, low Latin.]
Wapentake is all one with what we call a hundred: as upon a meeting for that purpose, they touched each other's weapons, in token of their fidelity and allegiance. Cowel.
 Hundred signifieth a hundred pledges, which were under the command and assurance of their alderman; which, as I suppose, was also called a wapentake, so named, of touching the weapon or spear of their alderman, and swearing to follow him faithfully, and serve their prince truly. But others think, that a wapentake was ten hundreds, or boroughs. Spenser.
WAR. n. f. [warre, old Dutch; guerre, Fr.]
War may be defined the exercise of violence under sovereign command against withstanders; force, authority, and resistance being the essential parts thereof. Violence, limited by authority, is sufficiently distinguished from robbery, and the like outrages; yet consisting in relation towards others, it necessarily requires a supposition of resistance, whereby the force of war becomes different from the violence inflicted upon slaves or yielding malefactors. Raleigh.
 On, you noblest English,
 Whose blood is fetcht from fathers of war proof. Shaksp.
 After a denunciation or indiction of war, the war is no more confined to the place of the quarrel, but left at large. Bacon.
 I saw the figure and armour of him, that headed the peasants in the war upon Bern, with the several weapons found on his followers. Addison.
 2. The instruments of war, in poetical language.
 The god of love inhabits there,
 With all his rage, and dread, and grief, and care;
 His complement of stores, and total war. Prior.
 3. Forces; army. Poetically.
 On th' embattled ranks the waves return,
 And overwhelm the war. Milton's Par. Lost, b. xii.
 4. The profession of arms.

Thine

WAR

Thine almighty word leapt down from heaven, as a fierce man of war into the midst of a land of destruction. Wisdom.
5. Hostility; state of opposition; act of opposition.
Duncan's horses
Turn'd wild in nature, broke their stalls, flung out, Contending 'gainst obedience, as they would Make war with man. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
To WAR, v. n. [from the noun.] To make war; to be in a state of hostility.
Was this a face,
To be expos'd against the warring winds? Shakespeare.
Why should I war without the walls of Troy,
That find such cruel battle here within? Shakespeare.
Make peace with God, for you must die, my lord.—
—Have you that holy feeling in your soul,
To counsel me to make my peace with God,
And are you yet to your own soul's loss blind,
That you will war with God, by murdering me? Shakespeare.
He teacheth my hands to war. 2 Sam. xxii.
This charge I commit unto thee, son Timothy, that thou by them mightest war a good warfare. 1 Tim. i. 18.
He limited his forces, to proceed in aid of the Britons, but in no wise to war upon the French. Bacon's Hen. VII.
We seem ambitious God's whole work 't undo;
With new diseases on ourselves we war,
And with new physick, a worse engine far. Dante.
His next design
Was all the Theban race in arms to join,
And war on Theseus. Dryden.
To the island of Delos, by being reckoned a sacred place, nations warring with one another resorted with their goods,
and traded as in a neutral country. Arbutnot on Coins.
To WAR, v. a. To make war upon. A word not any longer used.
And then long time before great Nimrod was,
That first the world with sword and fire warred. Spenser.
To them the same was render'd, to the end,
To war the Scot, and borders to defend. Daniel's Civ. War.
To WARBLE, v. a. [warben, old Teutonic; wervelen, German; to twirl, or turn round.]
1. To quaver any sound.
2. To cause to quaver.
Follow me as I sing,
And touch the warbled string. Milton.
3. To utter musically.
She can thaw the numbing spell,
If she be right invok'd with warbled song. Milton.
To WARBLE, v. n.
1. To be quavered.
Such strains ne'er warble in the linnets' throat. Gay.
2. To be uttered melodiously.
A plaintive song, plain-singing voice requires,
For warbling notes from inward cheering flow. Sidney.
There birds resort, and in their kind, thy praise
Among the branches chant in warbling lays. Wotton.
3. To sing.
Creatures that liv'd and mov'd, and walk'd, or flew;
Birds on the branches warbling; all things simul'd. Milton.
She warbled in her throat,
And tun'd her voice to many a merry note, Dryden.
A bard amid the joyous circle sings
High airs attempt'd to the vocal strings;
Whilst warbling to the varied strain advance,
Two sprightly youths to form the bounding dance. Pope.
WARBLER, n. s. [from warble.] A singer; a songster.
Hark! on every bough,
In lulling strains the feather'd warblers woo. Tickell.
WARD, A syllable much used as an affix in composition, as heavenward, with tendency to heaven; hitherward, this way; from peano, Saxon
Before she could come to the arbour, she saw walking from her-ward, a man in shepherdish apparel. Sidney.
To WARD, v. a. [peapian, Saxon; waren, Dutch; garder, French.]
1. To guard; to watch.
He marched forth towards the castle wall,
Whole gates he found fast shut, no living sight
To ward the fame, nor answer comers' call. Fairy Queen.
2. To defend; to protect.
Tell him it was a hand that warded him
From thousand dangers, bid him bury it. Shakespeare.
3. To fence off; to obstruct, or turn aside any thing mischievous.
Not once the baron lift his armed hand
To strike the maid, but gazing on her eyes,
Where lordly Cupid seem'd in arms to stand,
No way to ward or thru her blows he tries.
Up and down he traverses his ground;
Now wards a felling blow, now strikes again. Daniel.

WAR

Toxews amaz'd, and with amazement flow,
Or to revenge, or ward the coming blow,
Stood doubting; and while doubting thus he stood,
Receiv'd the steel bath'd in his brother's blood. Dryden.
The pointed javelin warded off his rage. Addison.
The provision of bread for food; clothing to ward off the inclemency of the air, were to be first look'd after. Woodho.
It instructs the scholar in the various methods of warding off the force of objections, and of discovering and repelling the subtle tricks of sophisters. Watt's Improv. of the Mind.
To WARD, v. n.
1. To be vigilant; to keep guard.
2. To act upon the defensive with a weapon.
So redoubling her blows, drove the stranger to no other shift than to ward and go back.
Short crooked swords in closer fight they wear,
And on their warding arms light bucklers bear. Dryden.
WARD, n. s. [from the verb.]
1. Watch; act of guarding.
Still when he slept, he kept both watch and ward. Spenser.
Sublime on these a tow'r of steel is rear'd;
And dire Tiphone there keeps the ward. Dryden.
Girt in her sanguine gown, by night and day,
Observant of the souls that pass the downward way. Dryden.
2. Garrison; those who are intrusted to keep a place.
By reason of these two forts, though there be but small wards left in them, there are two good towns now grown, which are the greatest stay of both those two countries. Spenser.
Th' affixed castles ward
Their steadfast froids did mightily maintain. Spenser.
3. Guard made by a weapon in fencing.
Thou know'st my old ward; here I lay, and thus I bore my point. Shakespeare's Hen. IV.
Come from thy ward,
For I can here disarm thee with this stick. Shakespeare's Tempest.
Now, by proof it shall appear,
Whether thy horns are sharper, or my spear.
At this, I threw: for want of other ward,
He lifted up his hand, his front to guard. Dryden.
4. Fortres; strong hold.
She dwells securely on the excellency of her honour. Now could I come to her with any detection in my hand, I could drive her from the ward of her purity, her reputation, and a thousand other her defences, which now are too too strongly embattled against me. Shakespeare's Merry Wives of Windsor.
5. [Warda, law Lat.] District of a town.
Throughout the trembling city plac'd a guard,
Dealing an equal share to every ward. Dryden.
6. Custody; confinement.
That wretched creature being apprehended in that impiety, was held in ward. Hoster.
Stopt there was his too vehement speech with speed,
And he sent close to ward from where he stood. Daniel.
7. The part of a lock, which, corresponding to the proper key, hinders any other from opening it.
In the key-hole turns
Th' intricate wards, and ev'ry bolt and bar. Milton.
As there are locks for several purposes, so are there several inventions in the making and contriving their wards, or guards. Moxon's Mach. Exerc.
The keys, as well as the locks, were fitted ward to ward, by the same wisdom. Grew's Cosmology.
8. One in the hands of a guardian.
The king causeth bring up his wards, but bestoweth no more of their rents upon them than is useful. Drummond.
You know our father's ward,
The fair Monimia: is your heart at peace?
Is it so guarded that you could not love her? Orway.
Thy Violante's heart was ever thine,
Compell'd to wed, before she was my ward. Dryden.
When stern as tutors, and as uncles hard,
We lash the pupil, and defraud the ward. Dryden.
Titles of honour and privileges, the rich and the great can never deserve, unless they employ them for the protection of these, the true wards and children of God. Spenser.
9. The state of a child under a guardian.
I must attend his majesty's command, to whom I am now in ward, evermore in subjection.
Lewis the eleventh of France having much abated the greatness and power of the peers, would say, that he had brought the crown out of ward. Bacon.
10. Guardianship; right over orphans.
It is also inconvenient in Ireland, that the wards and marriages of gentlemen's children should be in the disposal of any of those lords. Spenser.
WARDEN, n. s. [warden, Dutch.]
1. A keeper; a guardian.
2. A head officer.
The warden of apothecaries hall. Garth.
A magi-

WAR

3. Warden of the cinque ports.
A magistrate that has the jurisdiction of these havens in the east part of England, commonly called the cinque ports, or five havens, who has there all that jurisdiction which the admiral of England has in places not exempt. The reason why minal of England should be assigned to these havens seems to be, because in respect of their situation, they formerly required a more vigilant care than other havens, being in greater danger of invasion by our enemies. Cowel.
4. [Pyram volentum, Lat. I know not whence denominated.] A large pear.
Nor must all shoots of pears alike be set,
Custumian, Syrian pears, and warden's great. May's Virg.
Ox-check when hot, and warden's bak'd some cry. King.
WARDER, n. s. [from ward.]
1. A keeper; a guard.
Upon those gates with force he fiercely flew,
And rending them in pieces, felly drew
Those warders strange, and all that else he met. Hubbard.
Where be these warders, that they wait not here?
Open the gates. Shakespeare's Henry VI.
Though bladed corn be lodg'd and trees blown down,
Though castles topple on their warders' heads, Shakespeare.
The warders of the gate but scarce maintain
Th' unequal combat, and resist in vain. Dryden.
2. A truncheon by which an officer of arms forbade fight.
Sound trumpets, and set forward combatants.
—But stay, the king hath thrown his warden down. Shakespeare.
Then, then, when there was nothing could have fluid
My father from the breast of Bolingbroke,
O, when the king did throw his warden down, Shakespeare.
His own life hung upon the staff he threw.
WARDMORE, n. s. [peaw and more, or gemot, Saxon; ward, more, low Lat.] A meeting; a court held in each ward or district in London for the direction of their affairs.
WARDROBE, n. s. [garderobe, French; garderoba, low Lat.] A room where cloaths are kept.
The third had of their wardrobe custody,
In which were not rich tires nor garments gay,
The plumes of pride, and wings of vanity,
But cloaths meet to keep keen cold away. Fairy Queen.
I will kill all his coats,
I'll murder all his ward-robe piece by piece
Until I meet the king. Shakespeare's Henry IV.
Behold!
What from his wardrobe he below'd allows,
To deck the wedding day of his unsupported spouse. Dryden.
It would not be an impertinent design to make a kind of an old Roman wardrobe, where you should see toga's and tu-mica's, the chlamys and trabea, and all the different vests and ornaments so often mentioned in the Greek and Roman authors. Addison.
WARDSHIP, n. s. [from ward.]
1. Guardianship.
By reason of the tenures in chief revived, the sums for respect of homage be encreased, and the profits of wardships cannot but be much advanced. Bacon.
2. Pupillage; state of being under ward.
The houses sued out their livery, and redeemed themselves from the wardship of tumults. King Charles.
WARE, The pretence of wear, more frequently used.
A certain man ware no cloaths. Luke viii. 27.
WARE, adj. [For this we commonly say aware.]
1. Being in expectation of; being provided against.
The lord of that servant shall come in a day when he looketh not for him, and in an hour that he is not ware of him. Matth. xxiv. 50.
2. Cautious; wary.
What man so wise, what earthly wit so ware,
As to defy the crafty cunning train
By which deceit doth mask in Vizor fair. Fairy Queen.
Bid her well be ware and still erect. Milton.
To WARE, v. n. To take heed of; to beware.
A shuffled, sudden, and uncertain light
That dances through the clouds, and thits again,
Then ware a rising tempest on the main. Dryden.
WARE, n. s. [paup, Saxon; ware, Dutch; wara, Swedish.]
Commonly something to be fold.
Let us, like merchants, show our foulest wares,
And think, perchance, they'll sell. Shakespeare.
If the people bring ware or any victuals to sell, that we would not buy it. Nehem. x. 31.
I know thou whole art but a shop
Of toys and trifles, traps and snares,
To take the weak, and make them stop;
Yet art thou false as thy ware. Ben. Johnson.
Why should my black thy love impair?
Let the dark shop commend the ware. Cleveland.
He turns himself to other wares which he finds your markets take off. Locke.

WAR

WAREFUL, adj. [ware and full.] Cautious; timorously prudent.
WAREFULNESS, n. s. [from wareful.] Cautiousness. Obsolete.
With pretence from Strephon her to guard, Sidney.
He met her full; but full of warefulness.
WAREHOUSE, n. s. [ware and house.] A storehouse of merchandise.
His understanding is only the warehouse of other mens lumber, I mean false and unconcluding reasonings rather than a repository of truth for his own use. Locke.
She had never more ships at sea, greater quantities of merchandise in her warehouses than at present. Addison.
She the big warehouse built,
Rais'd the strong crane. Thomson's Autumn.
WARELESS, adj. [from ware.] Uncautious; unwary. Spens.
WARELY, adv. [from ware.] Warily; cautiously; timorously.
They bound him hand and foot with iron chains,
And with continual watch did warily keep. Fairy Queen.
WAREFARE, n. s. [from ware and fare.] Military service; military life.
In the wilderness
He shall first lay down the rudiments
Of his great warfare, ere I send him forth
To conquer sin and death. Milton's Paradise Regain'd.
Faithful hath been your warfare, and of God
Accepted, fearless in his righteous cause. Milton.
Tully, when he read the Tactics, was thinking on the bar which was his field of battle: the knowledge of warfare is thrown away on a general who does not make use of what he knows. Dryden.
The state of Christians, even when they are not actually persecuted, is a perpetual state of warfare and voluntary sufferings. Atterbury's Sermons.
The scripture has directed us to refer these miscarriages in our Christian warfare to the power of three enemies. Rogers.
To WAREFARE, v. n. [from the noun.] To lead a military life.
That was the only amulet in that credulous warfaring age to escape dangers in battles. Camden's R. mains.
WARFABLE, adj. [war and habile, from habilis, Lat. or able.]
Military; fit for war.
The weary Britons, whose warfable youth
Was by Maximilian lately led away,
With wretched miseries and woeful ruth,
Were to those pagans made an open prey. Fairy Queen.
WARILY, adv. [from wary.] Cautiously; with timorous prudence; with wise forethought.
The charge thereof unto a courteous spirit
Commended was, who thereby did attend,
And warily awaited day and night,
From other covetous fiends it to defend. Fairy Queen.
The change of laws, especially concerning matters of religion, must be warily proceeded in. Hooker.
It will concern a man to treat conscience awfully and warily, by still observ'ng what it commands; but especially what it forbids. South's Sermons.
They searched diligently and concluded warily. Spenser.
WARINESS, n. s. [from wary.] Caution; prudent forethought;
timorous scrupulousness.
For your own conscience he gives innocence,
But for your fame a discreet wariness. Donne.
To determine what are little things in religion, great wariness is to be used. Spenser's Sermons.
The path was so very slippery, the shade so exceeding gloomy, and the whole wood so full of echoes, that they were forced to march with the greatest wariness, circumspection and silence. Addison's Freeholder.
Most men have so much of ill nature, or of wariness, as not to tooth the vanity of the ambitious man. Addison.
I look upon it to be a most clear truth; and expected it with more wariness and reserve than was necessary. Atterbury.
WARRE, n. s. [Anciently used for work; whence bulwark.]
Building.
Thou findest fault where any's to be found,
And buildest strong work upon a weak ground. Spenser.
WARLIKE, n. s. [war and like.]
1. Fit for war; disposed to war.
She us'd so strange, and yet so well succeeding a temper, made her people by peace warlike. Sidney.
Old Sward with ten thousand warlike men,
All ready at appoint, was setting forth. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
When a warlike state grows soft and effeminate, they may be sure of a war. Bacon.
O imprudent Gauls,
Relying on false hopes, thus to incense
The warlike English. Philips.

Scaliger in his poetics is very warm against it. Broom's Notes on the Odyssey.
3. Violent; furious; vehement.
Welcome day-light; we shall have warm work on't:
The Moor will gage
His utmost forces on his next assault.
To win a queen and kingdom. Dryden's Spanish Friar.
4. Busy in action.
I hate the ling'ring summons to attend,
Death all at once would be a nobler end;
Fate is unkind; methinks a general
Should warm, and at the head of armies fall. Dryden.
5. Fanciful; enthusiastic.
If there be a sober and a wife man, what difference will there be between his knowledge and that of the most extravagant fancy in the world? If there be any difference between them, the advantage will be on the warm-headed man's side, as having the more ideas, and the more lively. Locke.
TO WARM. v. a. [from the adjective.]
1. To free from cold; to heat in a gentle degree.
It shall be for a man to burn, for he shall take thereof and warm himself. Isa. xlv. 15.
There shall not be a coal to warm at, nor fire to sit before it. Isa. xlvii. 14.
The mounted sun
Shot down direct his fervid rays to warm
Earth's inmost womb.
These soft fires with kindly heat
Of various influence, foment and warm. Milton.
2. To heat mentally; to make vehement.
The action of Homer being more full of vigour than that of Virgil, is more pleasing to the reader: one warms you by degrees, the other sets you on fire all at once, and never intermits his heat. Dryden.
WARMING-PAN. n. f. [warm and pan.] A covered bras pan for warming a bed by means of hot coals.
WARMING-STONE. n. f. [warm and stone.] To these useful stones and the warming-stones, digged in Cornwall, which being once well heated at the fire retains its warmth a great while, and hath been found to give ease in the internal hæmorrhoids. Ray on the Creation.
WARMLY. adv. [from warm.]
1. With gentle heat.
There the warming sun first warmly smote
The open field. Milton.
2. Eagerly; ardently.
Now I have two right honest wives
One to Atreides I will send,
And t'other to my Trojan friend;
Each prince shall thus with honour have What both so warmly seem to crave. Prior.
3. The ancients expect you should do them right in the account you intend to write of their characters: I hope you think more warmly than ever of that design. Pope.
WARMNESS. n. f. [from warm.]
WARMTH. n. f. [from warm.]
1. Gentle heat.
Then am I the prisoner, and his bed my goal; from the loathed warmth wherof deliver me.
Cold plants have a quicker perception of the heat of the sun encircling than the hot herbs have; as a cold hand will sooner find a little warmth than an hot. Bacon's Natural History.
He vital virtue infus'd, and vital warmth
Throughout the fluid mals. Milton.
Here kindly warmth their mounting juice ferments
To nobler tastes, and more exalted scents. Addison.

What do'st thou scorn me for my gentle counsel?
And foeth the devil that I warn thee from? Shakespeare.
Our first parents had been warn'd
His mortal sin. Milton's Paradise Lost.
The hand can hardly lift up itself high enough to strike, but it must be seen; so that it warns while it threatens; but a false insidious tongue may whisper a lie so close and low, that though you have ears to hear yet you shall not hear. South.
Juturna warns the Daunian chief,
Of Lausus' danger, urging swift relief. Dryden.
If we consider the mistakes in mens disputes and notions, how great a part is owing to words, and their uncertain or mistaken significations; this we are the more carefully to be warned of, because the arts of improving it have been made the business of mens study. Locke.
The father, whilst he warn'd his erring son,
The sad examples which he ought to shun Describ'd.
When first young Maro sung of kings and wars,
Ere warning Phœbus touch'd his trembling ears,
Perhaps he seem'd above the critic's law,
And but from nature's fountains scorn'd to draw. Pope.
2. To admonish of any duty to be performed, or practice or place to be avoided or forsaken.

WATCH, n. f. [water, Dutch; wæter, Saxon.] Water.
Sir Isaac Newton defines water, when pure, to be a very fluid salt, volatile, and void of all flavour or taste; and it seems to consist of small, smooth, hard, porous, spherical particles, of equal diameters, and of equal specific gravities, as Dr. Cheyne observes; and also that there are between them spaces so large, and ranged in such a manner, as to be pervious on all sides. Their smoothness accounts for their sliding easily over one another's surfaces: their sphericity keeps them all from touching one another in more points than one; and by both these their frictions in sliding over one another, is rendered the least possible. Their hardness accounts for the incompressibility of water, when it is free from the intermixture of air. The porosity of water is so very great, that there is at least forty times as much space as matter in it; for water is nineteen times specifically lighter than gold, and consequently rarer in the same proportion. Quincy.

come to be assured that there is such a being as God? Tillotson.
A child his mother so well instructed this way in geography, that he knew the limits of the four parts of the world. Locke.
It is not impossible to God to make a creature with more ways to convey into the understanding the notice of corporeal things, than those five he has given to man. Locke.
16. Method; scheme of management.
He durst not take open way against them, and as hard it was to take a secret, they being to continually followed by the best, and every way ablett of that region. Sidney, b. ii.
Will not my yielded crown redeem my breath?
Still am I fear'd? is there no way but death? Daniel.
As by calling evil good, a man is misrepresented to himself in the way of flattery; so by calling good evil, he is misrepresented to others, in the way of slander. South's Sermons.
Now what impious ways my wishes took?
How they the monarch, and the man forsook? Prior.
The senate, forced to yield to the tribunes of the people, thought it their wisest course to give way also to the time. Swift.

W A Y

17. Private determination.
He was of an high mind, and loved his own will and his way,
as one that revered himself, and would reign indeed. Bacon.
If I had my way,
He had mew'd in flames at home, not i' th' senate;
I had sing'd his furs by this time. B. Johnson's Catiline.
18. Manner; mode.
She with a calm carelessness let every thing slide, as we do by their speeches, who neither in matter nor person do any way belong unto us. Sidney.

and shutting of which are the countryman's weather wiser.
Derham's Physico-Theology.
To WEAVE. v. a. Preterite wove, wearied, part. pass. woven, wearied; [pejan, Saxon; woven, Dutch.]
1. To form by texture; to form by inserting one part of the materials within another.
Here in her hairs
The painter plays the spider, and hath woven
A golden mesh to intrap the hearts of men, Faster than gnats in cobwebs. Shakespeare.
The women wove hangings for the grove. 2 Kings xxiii. 7.
White seem'd her robes, yet woven so they were,
As snow and gold together had been wrought. Dryden.
These purple vests were woven by Dardan dames. Dryden.
Dan Pope for thy misfortune griev'd,
With kind concern and skill has woven d
A silken web; and ne'er shall fade
Its colours; gently has he laid
The mantle o'er thy sad distress:
And Venus shall the texture bles. Prior.
2. To unite by intermixture.
When religion was woven into the civil government, and flourished under the protection of the emperors, mens thoughts and discourses were full of secular affairs; but in the three first centuries of christianity, men who embraced this religion had given up all their interests in this world, and lived in a perpetual preparation for the next. Addison.
3. To interpose; to insert.
The duke be here to-night! the better! best!
This woven itself perforce into my business. Shakespeare.
To WEAVE. v. n. To work with a loom.
WEAVER. n. f. [from weave.] One who makes threads into cloth.
Upon these taxations,
The clothiers all not able to maintain,
The many to them longing, have put off
The spinners, carders, fullers, weavers. Shak. Hen. VIII.
My days are swifter than a weaver's shuttle, and are spent without hope. Joh. vii. 6.
The

- The weaver may cast religion upon what loom he please. How.
Her flag aloft spreads ruffling to the wind,
And sanguine streamers seem the flood to fire:
The weaver charm'd with what his loom design'd,
Goes on to see, and knows not to retire. Dryden.
WEAVERFISH. n. f. [araneus piscis, Latin.] A fish. Answorth.
WEB. n. f. [pebba, Saxon.]
1. Texture; any thing woven.
Pendope, for her Ulysses' sake,
Devis'd a web her woovers to deceive;
In which the work that she all day did make,
The fame at night she did again unweave. Spenser.
Spiders touch'd, seek their web's inmost part. Davies.
By day the web and loom,
And homely household talk shall be her doom. Dryden.
The fates, when they this happy web have spun,
Shall bles the sacred clue and bid it smoothly run. Dryden.
A silken web; and ne'er shall fade
Its colours. Prior.
2. Some part of a sword. Obsolete.
The sword, whereof the web was steel;
Pommel, rich stone; hilt, gold, approv'd by touch. Fairf.
3. A kind of dufky film that hinders the sight; suffusion.
This is the foul fibertigibbet; he gives the web and the pin, quints the eye, and makes the hairlip. Shakespeare.
WEBBED. adj. [from web.] Joined by a film.
Such as are whole-footed, or whole toes are webbed together, their legs are generally short, the most convenient size for swimming. Derham's Physico-Theology.
WEBFOOTED. adj. [web and foot.] Palmipedous; having films between the toes.
Webfooted fowls do not live constantly upon the land, nor far to enter the water. Ray on the Creation.
WEBSTER. n. f. [pebyrne, Saxon; a woman-weaver.] A weaver. Obsolete.
After local names, the most in number have been derived from occupations; as Taylor, Webster, Wheeler. Camden.
To WED. v. a. [pestan, Saxon.]
1. To marry; to take for husband or wife.
If one by one you wedded all the world,
Or, from the all that are, took something good
To make a perfect woman; she you kill'd
Would be unparallel'd. Shakespeare.
Never did thy beauty, since the day
I saw thee first, and wedded thee, adorn'd
With all perfection, so inflame my senses.
Cloe, blind to wit and worth,
Weds the rich dullness of some son of earth. Pope.
2. To join in marriage.
In Syracuse was I born, and wed
Unto a woman happy but for me. Shakespeare.
Then I shall be no more;
And Adam, wedded to another Eve, Shall live with her. Milton's Paradise Lost.
The woman in us still prosecutes a deceit like that begun in the garden; and our understandings are wedded to an Eve, as fatal as the mother of their miseries. Glanville.
3. To unite for ever.
Affliction is enamour'd of thy parts,
And thou art wedded to calamity. Shakespeare. Rom. and Jul.
4. To take for ever.
Though the principal men of the house of commons were again elected to serve in this parliament, yet they were far from wedded the war, or taking themselves to be concerned to make good any declaration made by the former. Clarendon.
They positively and concernedly wedded his cause. Clarendon.
5. To unite by love or fondness.
Men are wedded to their lusts, and resolved upon a wicked course; and so it becomes their interest to wish there were no God. Tillotson's Sermons.
To WED. v. n. To contract matrimony.
When I shall wed,
That lord whose hand shall take my plight, shall carry Half my love with him, half my care and duty. Shakespeare.
To love, to wed.
For Hymen's rites, and for the marriage bed
You were ordain'd. Suckling.
Nor took I Guiscard, by blind fancy led,
Or hasty choice as many women wed;
But with deliberate care. Dryden.
WEDDING. n. f. [from wed.] Marriage; nuptials; the nuptial ceremony.
Come, away!
For you shall hence upon your wedding-day. Shakespeare.
I will dance and eat plums at your wedding. Shakespeare.
Let her beauty be her wedding dower;
For me and my possessions the effects not. Shakespeare.
When my son was entered into his wedding-chamber, he fell down and died. 2 Esdr. x. 1.
These three country bills agree, that each wedding produces four children. Graunt's Bills of Mortality.

W E E

- His friends were invited to come and make merry with him;
and this was to be the wedding-feast. L'Estrange.
If she affirmed herself to be a virgin, she must on her wedding-day, and in her wedding cloaths perform the ceremony of going alone into the den, and stay an hour with the lion.
Swift.
A woman seldom asks advice before she has bought her wedding-cloaths. Spectator.
WEDGE. n. f. [wegge, Danish; wegge, Dutch.]
1. A body, which having a sharp edge, continually growing thicker, is used to cleave timber; one of the mechanical powers.
A barbarous troop of clownish fone,
The honour of these noble bows down threw;
Under the wedge I heard the trunk to groan. Spenser.
The fifth mechanical faculty is the wedge used in the cleaving of wood. Wilkins's Mathematical Magick.
He left his wedge within the cloven oak
To whet their courage. Dryden's Æneid.
The oak let many a heavy groan, when he was cleft with a wedge of his own timber. Arbutnot's Hist. of John Bull.
2. A mass of metal.
As sparks from the anvil used to fly,
When heavy hammers on the wedge are swaid. Fa. Qu.
When I saw a goodly Babylonish garment, and a wedge of gold of fifty shekels weight, then I coveted them. Josh. vii.
3. Any thing in the form of a wedge.
In warlike multers they appear,
In rhombs and wedges and half-moons and wings. Milton.
To WEDGE. v. a. [from the noun.] To fasten with wedges; to straiten with wedges; to cleave with wedges; to stop; to obstruct.
My heart,
As wedged with a sigh would rive in twain,
Left Hector, or my father, should perceive me. Shakespeare.
Where have you been broiling?—
—Among the crowd i' the abbey, where a finger
Could not be wedged in more. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.
Your wit will not so soon out as another man's will; it is strongly wedged up in a blockhead. Shakespeare.
Part
In common, rang'd in figure wedge their way; Intelligent of seasons. Milton's Paradise Lost.
Sergeffus in the centaur, soon he pals'd,
Wedge d in the rocky shoals and sticking fast. Dryden.
Wedge on the keenest scythes,
And give us steeds that snort against the foe. A. Phillips.
What impulse can be propagated from one particle, entomb'd and wedged in the very center of the earth, to another in the center of Saturn. Bentley's Sermons.
WEDLOCK. n. f. [peb and lac, Sax. marriage and gift.] Marriage; matrimony.
She doth stray about
By holy crosses, where she kneels and prays
For happy wedlock hours. Shakespeare.
Sirrah, your brother is legitimate;
Your father's wife did after wedlock bear him:
And if she did play false, the fault was her's. Shakespeare.
Can wedlock know so great a curse,
As putting husbands out to nurse. Cleaveland.
He his happiest choice too late,
Shall meet already link'd, and wedlock-bound
To a fell adversary. Milton's Paradise Lost.
May not a prison or a grave,
Like wedlock, honour's title have?
One thought the sex's prime felicity
Was from the bonds of wedlock to be free:
And uncontroll'd to give account to none. Dryden.
A man determin'd about the fiftieth year of his age to enter upon wedlock. Addison.
WEDNESDAY. n. f. [poben-day, Saxon; aden/day, Swedish;
wen/day, Dutch; wen/day, Islandic.] The fourth day of the week, so named by the Gothick nations from Woden or Odin.
Where is the honour of him that died on wednesday. Shak.
WEE. adj. [A Saxon word of the same root with weeing, Dutch;
wenig, German.] Little; small: whence the word weasel or weasel is used for little; as a weasel face. In Scotland it denotes small or little; as wee ane, a little one, or child; a wee bit, a little bit.
Does he not wear a great round beard, like a glover's paring knife?—No, forsooth; he hath but a little wee face with a little yellow beard. Shakespeare. Merry Wives of Windsor.
WEECHELM. n. f. [This is often written witch elm.] A species of elm.
A cion of a weechelm grafted upon an ordinary elm, will put forth leaves as broad as the brim of a hat. Bacon.
WEED. n. f. [peob, Saxon; tares.]
1. An herb noxious or useless.
If he had an immoderate ambition; which is a weed, if it be a weed, apt to grow in the best soils, it doth not appear that it was in his nature. Clarendon.
He

He wand'ring feeds
On slowly growing herbs and ranker weeds. Sandys.
Too much manuring fill'd that field with weeds,
While fests, like locusts, did destroy the seeds. Denham.
Stinking weeds and poisonous plants have their use. Mora.
When they are cut, let them lie, if weedy, to kill the weeds. Mortimer's Husbandry.
Their virtue, like their Tyber's flood Rolling, its course design'd the country's good;
But oft the torrent's too impetuous speed,
From the low earth tore some polluting weed;
And with the blood of Jove there always ran
Some viler part, some tincture of the man. Prior.
2. [Weeda, Saxon; weed, Dutch.] A garment; cloaths; habit; drefs. Now scarce in use, except in widow's weeds, the mourning drefs of a widow. Sidney.
My mind for weeds your virtue's livery wears. Sidney.
Neither is it any man's business to cloath all his servants with one weed; nor theirs to cloath themselves so, if left to their own judgments. Hooker.
They meet upon the way
An aged fire, in long black weeds yclad;
His feet all bare, his beard all hoary gray,
And by his belt his book he hanging had. Fairy Queen.
Livery is also called the upper weed which a serving man wears, so called as it was delivered and taken from him at pleasure. Spenser.
The snake throws her enamelled skin,
Weed wide enough to wrap a fairy in. Shakespeare.
Throng of knights and barons hold,
In weeds of peace high triumphs hold,
With store of ladies. Milton.
Lately your fair hand in woman's weed
Wrapp'd my glad head. Waller.
To WEED. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To rid of noxious plants.
When you sow the berries of bays, weed not the borders for the first half year; for the weed giveth them shade. Bacon.
Your feedings having flood 'till June, bestow a weeding or a light howing upon them. Mortimer.
2. To take away noxious plants.
Oh Marcius,
Each word thou'lt spoke hath weeded from my heart
A root of ancient envy. Shakespeare, Coriolanus.
3. To free from any thing hurtful or offensive.
He weeded the kingdom of such as were devoted to Elaiana, and manumiz'd it from that most dangerous confederacy.
Howel's Vocal Forest.
Sarcasms, contumelies, and invectives, fill so many pages of our controversial writings, that, were those weeded out, many volumes would be reduced to a more moderate bulk and temper. Decay of Piety.
4. To root out vice.
Wife fathers be not as well aware in weeding from their children ill things, as they were before in grafting in them learning. Shaban's Schoolmaster.
One by one, as they appeared, they might all be weeded out, without any signs that ever they had been there. Locke.
WEEDER. n. f. [from weed.] One that takes away any thing noxious.
A weeder out of his proud adversaries,
A liberal rewarder of his friends. Shakespeare, Richard III.
WEEDHOOK. n. f. [from weed and hook.] A hook by which weeds are cut away or extirpated.
In May get a weedhook, a crotch, and a glove,
And weed out such weeds as the corn doth not love. Tusser.
WEEDLESS. adj. [from weed.] Free from weeds; free from any thing useless or noxious.
So many weedless paradises be,
Which of themselves produce no venomous sin. Donne.
A crystal brook,
When troubled most it does the bottom show;
'Tis weedless all above, and rockless all below. Dryden.
WEEDY. adj. [from weed.]
1. Consisting of weeds.
There on the pendant boughs, her coronet weed
Clamb'ring to hang, an envious sliver broke,
When down her weedy trophies and herself
Fell in the weeping brook. Shakespeare, Hamlet.
2. Abounding with weeds.
Hid in a weedy lake all night I lay,
Secure of safety. Dryden's En.
If it is weedy, let it lie upon the ground. Mortimer.
WEEK. n. f. [from weke, Dutch; vecka, Swedish.]
The space of seven days.
Fulfil her week, and we will give thee this also. Gen. xxix.
WEEKDAY. n. f. [from week and day.] Any day not Sunday.
One solid dish his weekday meal affords.
An added pudding solemniz'd the Lord's. Pope.
WEEKLY. adj. [from week.] Happening, produced, or done once a week; hebdomadary.

The Jews had always their weekly readings of the law of Moses. Hooker.
So liv'd our fires, ere doctors learn'd to kill,
And multiply'd with heirs their weekly bill. Dryden.
Nothing more frequent in their weekly papers, than affecting to confound the terms of clergy and high-church, and then loading the latter with calumny. Swift.
WEEKLY. adv. [from week.] Once a week; by hebdomadal periods.
These are obliged to perform divine worship in their turns weekly, and are sometimes called hebdomadal canons. Asse.
WEEK. n. f. [from weke, Dutch; vecka, Swedish.]
1. A whirlpool.
2. A twiggan snare or trap for fish, [perhaps from weilow.]
To WEEN. v. n. [from ween, Saxon; weenen, Dutch.] To think;
to imagine; to form a notion; to fancy. Obsolete.
Ah lady dear, quoth then the gentle knight,
Well may I ween your grief is wondrous great. Spenser.
So well it her seems, that ye would ween
Some angel had been. Spenser's Epithalamium.
When weening to return, whence they did stray,
They cannot find that path which first was shown;
But wander to and fro in ways unknown,
Further from end then, when they nearest ween. Fa. Queen.
Thy father, in pity of my hard distress,
Levy'd an army, weening to redeem
And reinstate me in the diadem. Shakespeare, Henry VI.
Ween you of better luck,
I mean, in perjur'd witness, than your master,
Whose minister you are, while here he liv'd Upon this naughty earth. Shakespeare, Henry VIII.
They ween'd
That self-same day, by fight or by surprise,
To win the mount of God; and on his throne
To set the envy of his state, the proud Aspirer; but their thoughts prov'd fond and vain. Milton.
To WEEP. v. n. preter. and part. pass. weep'd, weep'd. [from wean, Saxon.]
1. To show sorrow by tears.
In that sad time
My manly eyes did scorn an humble tear;
And what these sorrows could not hence exhale,
That beauty hath, and made them blind with weeping, Shak.
I fear he will prove the weeping philosopher when he grows old, being so full of unmanly fadnets in his youth. Shakespeare.
The days of weeping and mourning for Moses were ended.
Deutr. xxxiv. 8.
Have you wept for your sin, so that you were indeed sorrowful in your spirit? Are you so sorrowful that you hate it? Do you so hate it that you have left it? Taylor.
Away, with women weep, and leave me here,
Fix'd, like a man, to die without a tear,
Or save, or slay us both. Dryden.
A corps it was, but whose it was, unknown;
Yet mov'd, how'er, she made the case her own;
Took the bad omen of a shipwreck'd man,
As for a stranger weep. Dryden.
When Darius wept over his army, that within a single age not a man of all that confluence would be left alive, Artaban-us improv'd his meditation by adding, that yet all of them should meet with so many evils, that every one should wish himself dead long before. Wake's Preparation for Death.
This lovely weeping fair cannot be dearer to thee,
Than thou art to thy faithful Scordid. Rass.
2. To shed tears from any passion.
Then they for sudden joy did weep,
And I for sorrow sung,
That such a king should play bo-peep,
And go the fools among. Shakespeare, King Lear.
3. To lament; to complain.
They weep unto me, saying, give us flesh that we may eat. Nam.
To WEEP. v. a.
1. To lament with tears; to bewail; to bemoan.
If thou wilt weep my fortunes, take my eyes. Shakespeare.
Nor was I near to close his dying eyes,
To wash his wounds, to weep his obsequies. Dryden.
We wand'ring go
Through dreary walds, and weep each other's woe. Pope.
2. To shed moisture.
Thus was this place
A happy rural seat of various view,
Groves whose rich trees weep'd od'rous gums and balm. Mil.
Let India boast her plants, nor envy we
The weeping amber or the balmy tree,
While by our oaks the precious loads are borne.
And realms commanded which those trees adorn. Pope.
3. To abound with wet.
Key-grass grows on clayey and weeping grounds. Mortimer.
WEEPER. n. f. [from weep.]
1. One who sheds tears; a lamenter; a bewailer; a mourner.
If you have serv'd God in a holy life, send away the women

men and the weepers: tell them it is as much intemperance to weep too much as to laugh too much: if thou art alone, or with sitting company, die as thou should'st; but do not die impatiently, and like a fox caught in a trap. Taylor.
Laughter is easy; but the wonder lies,
What store of brine supply'd the weeper's eyes. Dryden.
2. A white border on the sleeve of a mourning coat.
WE'ERISH. adj. [See WEARISH.] This old word is used by Shaban in a sense which the lexicographers seem not to have known. Applied to tastes, it means insipid; applied to the body, weak and wat'ry: here it seems to mean sour; furly.
A voice not soft, weak, piping, womanish; but audible, strong, and manlike: a countenance not we'erish and crabbed, but fair and comely. Shaban's Schoolmaster.
To WEET. v. n. preterite wet, or wote. [from wean, Saxon; weten, Dutch.] To know; to be informed; to have knowledge.
Obsolete.
Him the prince with gentle court did board;
Sir knight, mought I of you this court'sy read,
To weet why on your shield, so goodly fear'd,
Bears ye the picture of that lady's head? Spenser.
I bind,
On pain of punishment, the world to weet
We stand up peerless. Shakespeare, Ant. and Cleopatra.
But well I weet thy cruel wrong
Adorns a nobler poet's song. Prior.
WE'ERLESS. adj. [from weat.] Unknowing. Spenser.
WE'EVIL. n. f. [from weat, Saxon; weel, Dutch.] A grub.
A worm called a weevil, bred under ground, feedeth upon roots; as parsnips and carrots. Bacon's Natural History.
Corn is so innocent from breeding of mice, that it doth not produce the very weevils that live in it and consume it. Bentley.
WE'ZEL. n. f. [See WEASEL.]
I suck melancholy out of a fong, as a weazel sucks eggs. Shak.
The corn-devouring weazel here abides,
And the wife ant. Dryden's Georg.
WEFT. The old preterite and part. pass. from To weave. Spens.
WEFT. n. f. [from weave, French; weft, to wander, Islandick;
weft, Latin.]
1. That of which the claim is generally waved; any thing wandering without an owner, and seized by the lord of the manour.
His horse, it is the herald's weft;
No, 'tis a mare. Ben. Johnson's Underwoods.
2. It is in Bacon for weft, a gentle blast.
The smell of violets exceedeth in sweetness that of spices, and the strongest fort of smells are best in a weft air off. Bac.
WEFT. n. f. [from weave, Saxon.] The woof of cloth.
WEFTAGE. n. f. [from weft.] Texture.
The whole muscles, as they lie upon the bones, might be truly tanned; whereby the weftage of the fibres might more easily be observed. Gray's Museum.
To WEIGH. v. a. [from weagan, Saxon; weghen, Dutch.]
1. To examine by the balance.
Earth taken from land adjoining to the Nile, and preserved, so as not to be wet nor wasted, and weighed daily, will not alter weight until the seventeenth of June, when the river beginneth to rise; and then it will grow more and more ponderous,
'till the river cometh to its height. Bacon's Natural History.
Th' Eternal hand forth his golden scales,
Wherein all things created first he weigh'd. Milton.
2. To be equivalent to in weight.
By the exsuction of the air out of a glass-vessel, it made that vessel take up, or suck up, to speak in the common language, a body weighing divers ounces. Boyle.
3. To pay, allot, or take by weight.
They that must weigh out my afflictions,
They that my trust must grow to, live not here;
They are, as all my comforts are, far hence. Shakespeare.
They weighed for my price thirty pieces of silver. Lech. xi.
4. To raise; to take up the anchor.
Barbarossa, using this exceeding cheerfulness of his soldiers, weighed up the fourteen gallees he had sunk. Knolles.
Here he left me, ling'ring here delay'd
His parting kifs, and there his anchor weigh'd. Dryden.
5. To examine; to balance in the mind.
Regard not who it is which speaketh, but weigh only what is spoken. Hooker.
I have in equal balance justly weigh'd
What wrongs our arms may do, what wrongs we suffer,
And find our griefs heavier than our offences. Shak. H. IV.
The ripeness or unripeness of the occasion must ever be well weighed. Bacon.
His majesty's speedy march left that design to be better weighed and digested. Clarendon.
You chose a retreat, and not 'till you had maturely weighed the advantages of rising higher, with the hazards of the fall. Dryden.
All grant him prudent; prudence interest weighs,
And interest bids him seek your love and praise. Dryden.
The mind, having the power to suspend the satisfaction of any of its desires, is at liberty to examine them on all sides, and weigh them with others. Locke.

He is the only proper judge of our perfections, who weighs the goodness of our actions by the sincerity of our intentions.
Addison's Spectator.
6. To WEIGH down. To overbalance.
Fear weighs down faith with shame. Daniel's Civ. War.
7. To WEIGH down. To overburden; to oppress with weight; to depress.
The Indian fig boweth so low, as it taketh root again; the plenty of the sap, and the softness of the stalk, making the bough, being overladen, weigh down. Bacon.
In thy blood will reign
A melancholy damp of cold and dry;
To weigh thy spirits down. Milton.
Her father's crimes
Sit heavy on her, and weigh down her prayers;
A crown usurp'd, a lawful king depos'd,
His children murder'd. Dryden's Spanish Fryar.
My soul is quite weigh'd down with care, and asks
The soft refreshment of a moment's sleep. Addison's Cato.
Excellent persons, weighed down by this habitual sorrow of heart, rather deserve our compassion than reproach. Addison.
To WEIGH. v. n.
1. To have weight.
Exactly weighing and frangling a chicken in the scales, upon an immediate ponderation, we could discover no difference in weight; but suffering it to lie eight or ten hours, until it grew perfectly cold, it weighed most sensibly lighter. Brown.
2. To be considered as important; to have weight in the intellectual ballance.
This objection ought to weigh with those, whose reading is designed for much talk and little knowledge. Locke.
A wife man is then best satisfied, when he finds that the same argument which weighs with him has weighed with thousands before him, and is such as hath born down all opposition. Addis.
3. To raise the anchor.
When gath'ring clouds o'ershadow all the skies,
And shoot quick lightnings, weigh, my boys, he cries. Dry.
4. To bear heavily; to press hard.
Can't thou not minister to a mind diseas'd,
And with some sweet oblivious antidote
Cleave the stuff'd bosom of that perilous stuff
Which weighs upon the heart? Shakespeare, Macbeth.
WEIGHED. adj. [from weigh.] Experienced.
In an embassy of weight, choice was made of some sad person of known experience, and not of a young man, not weighed in state matters. Bacon.
WEIGHER. n. f. [from weigh.] He who weighs.
WEIGHT. n. f. [from weigh, Saxon.]
1. Quantity measured by the balance.
Tobacco cut and weighed, and then dried by the fire, loseth weight; and, after being laid in the open air, recovereth weight again. Bacon's Natural History.
Fain would I chuse a middle course to steer;
Nature's too kind, and justice too severe;
Speak for us both, and to the balance bring,
On either side, the father and the king;
Heav'n knows my heart is bent to favour thee;
Make it but scanty weight, and leave the rest to me. Dryd.
Boerhaave fed a sparrow with bread four days, in which time it eat more than its own weight; and yet there was no acid found in its body. Arbutnot on Aliments.
2. A mass by which, as the standard, other bodies are examined.
Just balances, just weights shall ye have. Lev. xix. 36.
Undoubtedly there were such weights which the physicians used, who, though they might reckon according to the weight of the money, they did not weigh their drugs with pieces of money. Arbutnot on Coins.
When the balance is intirely broke, by mighty weights fallen into either scale, the power will never continue long in equal division, but run intirely into one. Swift.
3. Ponderous mass.
A man leapeth better with weights in his hands than without; for that the weight, if proportionable, strengtheneth the finews by contracting them; otherwise, where no contraction is needful, weight hindereth: as we see in horseraces, men are curious to foresee that there be not the least weight upon the one horse more than upon the other. In leaping with weights, the arms are first cast backwards, and then forwards, with so much the greater force. Bacon's Natural History.
Wolley, who from his own great store might have A palace or a college for his grave,
Lies here interr'd;
Nothing but earth to earth, no pond'rous weight
Upon him, but a pebble or a quoit:
If thus thou lie'st neglected, what must we Hope after death, who are but shreds of thee? Bp. Corbet.
All their confidence
Under the weight of mountains bury'd deep. Milton.
Pride, like a gulf, swallows us up; our very virtues, when so leavened, becoming weights and plummetts to sink us to the deeper ruin. Government of the Tongue.

Then than the ill; and know, my dear, Kindness, and constancy will prove
The only pillars fit to bear
So vast a weight as that of love.
Gravity; heaviness; tendency to the center.
Heaviness or weight is not here considered as being such a natural quality, whereby condensed bodies do of themselves tend downwards; but rather as being an affection, whereby they may be measured.
The shaft that slightly was impress'd,
Now from his heavy fall with weight increas'd,
Drove through his neck.
What natural agent impel them so strongly with a transverse fist blow against that tremendous weight and rapidity, when whole worlds are falling?
5. Pressure; burthen; overwhelming power.
Thou art no Atlas for so great a weight.
So shall the world go on,
To good malignant, to bad men benign,
Under her own weight groaning.
We must those, who groan beneath the weight
Of age, disease, or want, commiserate.
The prince may carry the plough, but the weight lies upon the people.
Possession's load was grown so great,
He sunk beneath the cumbrous weight.
6. Importance; power; influence; efficacy.
How to make ye suddenly an answer,
In such a point of weight, so near mine honour,
In truth I know not.
If this right of heir carry any weight with it, if it be the ordinance of God, must not all be subject to it.
To make the sense of esteem or disgrace sink the deeper,
and be of the more weight, other agreeable or disagreeable things should constantly accompany these different states.
An author's arguments lose their weight, when we are persuaded that he only writes for argument's sake.
See, Lord, the sorrows of my heart,
Ere yet it be too late;
And hear my Saviour's dying groans,
To give those sorrows weight.
The solemnities that encompass the magistrate add dignity to all his actions, and weight to all his words.
1. Heavily; ponderously.
2. Solidly; importantly.
Is his poetry the worse, because he makes his agents speak weightily and fentitiously?
WEIGHTINESS. n. s. [from weighty.] Broome's Notes on the Odyssey.
1. Ponderosity; gravity; heaviness.
2. Solidity; force.
I fear I have dwelt longer on this passage than the weightiness of any argument in it requires.
3. Importance.
The apparent defect of her judgment, joined to the weightiness of the adventure, caused many to marvel.
WEIGHTLESS. adj. [from weight.]
1. Light; having no gravity.
How by him balanc'd in the weightless air?
Can't thou the wisdom of his works declare?
2. Not possible to be weighed. Improper.
It must both weightless and immortal prove,
Because the centre of it is above.
WEIGHTY. adj. [from weight.]
1. Heavy; ponderous.
You have already weary'd fortune so,
She cannot farther be your friend or foe;
But sits all breathless, and admires to feel
A fate so weighty, that it stops her wheel.
2. Important; momentous; efficacious.
I to your assistance do make love,
Masking the business from the common eye
For sundry weighty reasons.
No fool Pythagoras was thought;
Whilst he his weighty doctrines taught,
He made his listening scholars stand,
Their mouth still cover'd with their hand;
Else, may-be, some odd-thinking youth,
Lest friend to doctrine than to truth,
Might have refus'd to let his ears
Attend the music of the spheres.
Thus spoke to my lady the knight full of care,
Let me have your advice in a weighty affair.
3. Rigorous; severe. Not in use.
If, after two days thine, Athens contains thee,
Attend our weightier judgment.
WE'LAWAY. interj. [This I once believed a corruption of weal away, that is, happiness is gone; so Junius explained it; but the Saxon exclamation is palapa, wee on wee: from welaway, is formed by corruption weladay.] Alas.
Harrow now out, and welaway, he cried,
What dismal day hath sent this cursed light!

Ah, welaway! most noble lords, how can
Your cruel eyes endure so piteous sight?
Welayay, the while I was so fond,
To leave the good that I had in hand.
WE'LCOME. adj. [bien venu, French; pilcum, Saxon; wel- kom, Dutch.]
1. Received with gladness; admitted willingly to any place or enjoyment; grateful; pleasing.
I serve you, madam.
Your graces are right welcome.
He, though not of the plot, will like it,
And with it should proceed; for, unto men
Prest with their wants, all change is ever welcome.
Here let me earn my bread,
Till oft invocated death
Hasten the welcome end of all my pains.
He that knows how to make those he converses with easy, has found the true art of living, and being welcome and valued every where.
2. To bid WELCOME. To receive with professions of kindness.
Some stood in a row in so civil a fashion, as if to welcome us; and divers put their arms a little abroad, which is their gesture when they bid any welcome.
WE'LCOME. interj. A form of salutation used to a new comer, elliptically used for you are welcome.
Welcome, he said,
O long expected to my dear embrace.
Welcome, great monarch, to your own.
WE'LCOME. n. s.
1. Salutation of a new comer.
Welcome ever smiles, and farewell goes out sighing.
Lectures opening his free arms, and weeping.
His welcome forth.
2. Kind reception of a new comer.
I should be free from injuries, and abound as much in the true causes of welcome, as I should find want of the effects thereof.
I look'd not for you yet, nor am provided
For your fit welcome.
Madam, new years may well expect to find
We come from you, to whom they are so kind:
Still as they pass they court and smile on you,
And make your beauty as themselves seem new.
Where diligence opens the door of the understanding, and a welcome too.
To WELCOME. v. a. To salute a new comer with kindness.
I know no cause
Why I should welcome such a guest as grief,
Save bidding farewell to so sweet a guest
As my sweet Richard.
They stood in a row in so civil a fashion, as if to welcome us.
Thus we salute thee with our early song,
And welcome thee, and with thee long.
To welcome home
His warlike brother, is Piritous come.
The lark and linnet strain their warbling throats,
To welcome in the Spring.
WE'LCOME to our House. n. s. An herb.
WE'LCOMENESS. n. s. [from welcome.] Gratefulness.
Our joys, after some centuries of years, may seem to have grown elder, by having been enjoyed so many ages; yet will they really still continue new, not only upon the scores of their welcome, but by their perpetually equal, because infinite, distance from a period.
WE'LCOMER. n. s. [from welcome.] The saluter or receiver of a new comer.
Farewell, thou woful welcomer of glory.
WELD, or WOULD. n. s. [lutula, Latin.] Yellow weed, or dyers weed.
Its leaves are oblong and intire: it has an anomalous flower, consisting of many dissimilar leaves: the fruit is globular, hollow, and divided into three parts. The dyers use it for dying bright yellows and lemon colours; and this is by some supposed to be the plant used by the ancient Persians in painting their bodies.
To WELD. v. a. To beat one mass into another, so as to incorporate them.
Sparkling or welding heat is used when you double up your iron to make it thick enough, and so weld or work in the doubling into one another.
WE'LDER. n. s. A term perhaps merely Irish; though it may be derived from To weld, to turn or manage: whence welder, welder.
Such immediate tenants have others under them, and so a third and fourth in subordination, till it comes to the welder, as they call him, who sits at a rack-rent, and lives mile-rably.
WE'LFARE. n. s. [well and fare.] Happiness; success; prosperity.
If friends to a government forbear their assistance, they put it in the power of a few desperate men to ruin the welfare of those who are superior to them in strength and interest.

Discretion is the perfection of reason: cunning is a kind of craft that only looks out after our immediate interest and advantage.
To WELK. v. a. [Of this word in Spenser I know not well the meaning; pelican in Saxon, is to roll; wolken, in German, and pelcen, in Saxon, are clouds; whence I suppose welk, and welk is an undulation or corrugation, or corrugated or convoluted body. Wilk is used for a small shell fish.] To cloud; to obscure.
Now sad Winter welk'd hath the day,
And Phœbus, weary of his yearly task,
Establish'd hath his steeds in lowly lay,
As gentle shepherd 'gins to walk in West,
When ruddy Phœbus 'gins to bite their hasty supper best.
The welk'd Phœbus 'gan avail
His weary wain.
WE'KED. adj. Wrinkled; wreathed.
Methought his eyes
Were two full moons: he had a thousand noses, Horns welk'd and jaw'd like the enridged sea.
WE'KIN. n. s. [from pelican, to roll, or pelcen, clouds; Sax.]
1. The visible regions of the air. Out of use, except in poetry.
Ne in all the welkin was no cloud.
He leaves the welkin way most beaten plain,
And rapt with whirling wheels inflames the skyen,
With fire not made to burn, but fairly for to shine.
The swallow peeps out of her nest,
And cloudy welkin cleareth.
Spur your proud horses hard, and ride in blood:
Amaze the welkin with your broken flaves.
With feats of arms
From either end of heav'n the welkin burns.
Now my task is smoothly done,
I can fly, or I can run
Quickly to the green earth's end,
Where the bow'd welkin flow doth bend.
Their hideous yells
Rend the dark welkin.
2. WELKIN EYE, is, I suppose, blue eye; skycoloured eye.
Yet were it true
To say this boy were like me! Come, sir page,
Look on me with your welkin eye, sweet villain.
WELL. n. s. [jelle, pell, Saxon.]
1. A spring; a fountain; a source.
Begin then, sisters of the sacred well,
That from beneath the seat of Jove doth spring.
As the root and branch are but one tree,
And well and stream do but one river make;
So if the root and well corrupted be,
The stream and branch the same corruption take.
A deep narrow pit of water.
The muscles are so many well-buckets: when one of them ads and draws, 'tis necessary that the other must obey.
The cavity in which flairs are placed.
Hollow newelled flairs are made about a square hollow newel: suppose the well-hole to be eleven foot long, and six foot wide, and we would bring up a pair of flairs from the first floor eleven foot high, it being intended a sky-light shall fall through the hollow newel.
To WELL. v. n. [wellan, Saxon.] To spring; to issue as from a spring.
Therely a crystal stream did gently play,
Which from a sacred fountain welled forth.
The bubbling wave did ever freshly well.
A dreary cove,
All wallow'd in his own yet lukewarm blood,
That from his wound yet welled fresh, alas!
Himself affix'd to lift him from the ground,
With clotted locks, and blood that welled from out the wound.
From his two springs,
Pure welling out, he through the lucid lake
Of fair Dambea rolls his infant stream.
To WELL. v. a. To pour any thing forth.
To her people wealth they forth do well,
And health to every foreign nation.
WELL. adj. [Well seems to be sometimes an adjective, though it is not always easy to determine its relations.]
Not sick; not unhappy.
Mark, we use
To say the dead are well.
Lady, I am not well, else I should answer
From a full flowing stomach.
In poison there is physick; and this news,
That would, had I been well, have made me sick,
Being sick, hath in some measure made me well.
While thou art well, thou mayest do much good; but when thou art sick, thou can't not tell what thou shalt be able to do:

it is not very much nor very good. Few men mend with sickness, as there are but few who by travel and a wandering life become devout.
Men under irregular appetites never think themselves well, so long as they fancy they might be better; then from better they must rise to best.
Tis easy for any, when well, to give advice to them that are not.
2. Convenient; happy.
Holdings were so plentiful, and holders so scarce, as well was the landlord, who could get one to be his tenant.
Charity is made the constant companion and perfection of all virtues; and well it is for that virtue where it most enters, and longest stays.
This exactness is necessary, and it would be well too, if it extended itself to common conversation.
It would have been well for Genoa, if she had followed the example of Venice, in not permitting her nobles to make any purchase of lands in the dominions of a foreign prince.
3. Being in favour.
He followed the fortunes of that family; and was well with Henry the fourth.
4. Recovered from any sickness or misfortune.
I am forry
For your displeasure; but all will sure be well.
Just thoughts, and modest expectations are easily satisfied.
If we don't over-rate our pretensions, all will be well.
WELL. adv. [well, Gothic; pell, Saxon; wel, Dutch; vel, Hilandick.]
1. Not ill; not unhappily.
Some sense, and more estate, kind heav'n
To this well-lotted peer has given:
What then? he must have rule and sway;
Else all is wrong till he's in play.
2. Not ill; not wickedly.
My bargains, and well-won thrift he calls int'rest.
Thou one bad act with many deeds well done Mayst cover.
3. Skillfully; properly.
A private caution I know not well how to fort, unless I should call it political, by no means to build too near a great neighbour.
Beware and govern well thy appetite.
Whether the learn'd Minerva be her theme,
Or chaste Diana bathing in the stream;
None can record their heavenly praise so well.
What poet would not mourn to see His brother write as well as he?
4. Not amiss; not unsuccessfully; not erroneously.
Solymann commended them for a plot to well by them laid, more than he did the victory of others got by good fortune, not grounded upon any good reason.
The soldier that philosopher well blam'd,
Who long and loudly in the schools declaim'd.
Tis almost impossible to translate verbally and well.
5. Not insufficiently; not defectively.
The plain of Jordan was well watered every where.
We are well able to overcome it.
The merchant adventurers being a strong company, and well underfet with rich men, held out bravely.
6. To a degree that gives pleasure.
I like well, in some places, fair columns upon frames of carpenters work.
7. With praise; favourably.
All the world speaks well of you.
8. Well is sometimes like the French bien, a term of concession.
The knot might well be cut, but untied it could not be.
To know
In measure what the mind can well contain.
9. It is a word by which something is admitted as the ground for a conclusion.
Well, let's away, and say how much is done.
Well, by this author's confession, a number superior are for the succession in the house of Hanover.
10. As well as. Together with; not less than.
Coptos was the magazine of all the trade from Ethiopia, by the Nile, as well as of those commodities that came from the west by Alexandria.
11. Well is him or me; bene est, he is happy.
Well is him that dwelleth with a wife of understanding, and that hath not slipped with his tongue.
12. Well might. Nearly; almost.
I freed well nigh half th' angelick name.
13. It is used much in composition, to express any thing right, laudable, or not defective.
Antiochus understanding him not to be well affected to his affairs, provided for his own safety.
There may be safety to the well-affected Persians; but to those which do conspire against us, a memorial of destruction.
Should a whole host at once discharge the bows,
My well-aim'd shaft with death prevents the bows.

 Amid the main, two mighty fleets engage;
 Adium furveys the well-disputed prize. Dryden.
 The ways of well-doing are in number even as many, as are the kinds of voluntary actions: so that whatsoever we do in this world, and may do it ill, we shew ourselves therein by well-doing to be wise. Hooker, b. ii.
 The conscience of well-doing may pass for a recompense. L'Estrange.
 God will judge every man according to his works; to them, who by patient continuance in well-doing, endure through the heat and burden of the day, he will give the reward of their labour. Rogers's Sermons.
 As far the spear I throw,
 As flies an arrow from the well-drawn bow. Pope.
 Fair nymphs and well-dress'd youths around her shone,
 But ev'ry eye was fixt on her alone. Pope.
 Such a doctrine in St. James's air, Shou'd chance to make the well-drest rabble stare. Pope.
 The desire of esteem, riches, or power, makes men espouse
 the well-endowed opinions in fashion. Locke.
 We ought to stand firm in well-established principles, and not be tempted to change for every difficulty. Watts.
 Echenus sage, a venerable man!
 Whose well-taught mind the present age surpass'd. Pope.
 Some reliques of the true antiquity, though disguised, a well-eyed man may happily discover. Spenser on Ireland.
 How sweet the products of a peaceful reign?
 The heaven-taught poet, and enchanting strain:
 The well-fill'd palace, the perpetual feast;
 A land rejoicing, and a people blest. Pope.
 Turkish blood did his young hands imbue.
 From thence returning with deserv'd applause,
 Against the Moors his well-fleth'd sword he draws. Dryden.
 Fairest piece of well-form'd earth,
 Urge not thus your haughty birth. Waller.
 A rational soul can be no more discerned in a well-formed, than ill-shaped infant. Locke.
 A well-formed proposition is sufficient to communicate the knowledge of a subject. Watts.
 Oh! that I'd dy'd before the well-fought wall!
 Had some distinguish'd day renown'd my fall,
 All Greece had paid my solemn funerals. Pope.

 Where proud Athens rears her tow'ry head,
 With opening streets, and shining structures spread,
 She past, delighted, with the well-known seats. Pope.
 From a confus'd well-manag'd store,
 You both employ and feed the poor. Waller.
 A noble soul is better pleas'd with a zealous vindicator of liberty, than with a temporizing poet, or well-manner'd court-slave, and one who is ever decent, because he is naturally terrible. Dryden's Dedication to Juvenal.
 Well-meaners think no harm; but for the rest,
 Things sacred they pervert, and silence is the best. Dryden.
 By craft they may prevail on the weakness of some well-meaning men to engage in their designs. Rogers's Sermons.
 He examines that well-meant, but unfortunate, lie of the conquest of France. Arbutnot.
 A critic supposes he has done his part, if he proves a writer to have fail'd in an expression; and can it be wonder'd at, if the poets seem resolv'd not to own themselves in any error? for as long as one side despises a well-meant endeavour, the other will not be satisfied with a moderate approbation. Pope's Preface to his Works.
 Many sober, well-minded men, who were real lovers of the peace of the kingdom, were imposed upon. Clarendon.
 Jarring int'rests of themselves create
 Th' according musick of a well-mix'd state. Pope.
 When the blast of winter blows,
 Into the naked wood he goes;

 'Twas not the hasty product of a day,
 But the well-ripen'd fruit of wise delay. Dryden.
 Procure those that are fresh gathered, strait, smooth, and well-rooted. Mortimer's Husbandry.
 If I should instruct them to make well-running verses, they want genius to give them strength. Dryden.
 The eating of a well-seasoned dish, suited to a man's palate, may move the mind, by the delight itself that accompanies the eating, without reference to any other end. Locke.
 Instead of well-set hair, baldness. Jsa. iii. 24.
 Abraham and Sarah were old, and well-stricken in age. Genesis.
 Many well-shaped innocent virgins are waddling like bigbelled women. Spectator, N° 127.
 We never see beautiful and well-taught fruits from a tree
 choaked with thorns and briars. Dryden's Dufresnoy.
 The well-tim'd oars
 With sounding strokes divide the sparkling waves. Smith.
 Wisdom's triumph is well-tim'd retreat,
 As hard a science to the fair as great. Pope.
 Mean time we thank you for your well-took labour.
 Go to your rest. Shakefp. Hamlet.
 Oh you are well-tun'd now; but I'll let down the pegs that make this musick. Shakefp. Othello.
 Her well-tun'd neck he view'd,
 And on her shoulders her dishevel'd hair. Dryden.
 A well-weighed judicious poem, which at first gains no more upon the world than to be just received, infatuates itself by insensible degrees into the liking of the reader. Dryden.
 He rails

 WELLBEING. n. f. [well and be.] Happiness; prosperity.
 Man is not to depend upon the uncertain dispositions of men for his wellbeing, but only on God and his own spirit. Taylor's Rule of Living Holy.
 For whose wellbeing
 So amply, and with hands so liberal,
 Thou hast provided all things. Milton's Par. Lost, b. viii.
 The most sacred ties of duty are founded upon gratitude:
 such as the duties of a child to his parent, and of a subject to his sovereign. From the former there is required love and honour, in recompence of being; and from the latter obedience and subjection, in recompence of protection and well-being. South's Sermons.
 All things are subservient to the beauty, order, and well-being of the whole. L'Estrange.
 He who does not co-operate with this holy spirit, receives none of those advantages which are perfecting of his nature, and necessary to his wellbeing. Spectator, N° 571.
 WELLBORN. n. f. Not meanly descended.
 One whole extraction from an ancient line,
 Gives hope again that wellborn men may shine. Waller.
 Heav'n, that wellborn souls inspires,
 Prompts me, through lifted fowls, and rising fires,
 To rush undaunted to defend the walls. Dryden.
 WELLBRED. adj. [well and bred.] Elegant of manners; polite.
 None have been with admiration read,
 But who, besides their learning, were wellbred. Roscom.
 Both the poets were wellbred and well-natur'd. Dryden.
 Wellbred panicles civilly delight,
 In mumbling of the game they dare not bite. Pope.
 WELLNATURED. adj. [well and nature.] Good-natured; kind. Arbutnot.

Every whiffing in a laced coat, who frequents the chocolate-house, shall talk of the constitution.

WHIG. n. f. [whig, Saxon.]

1. Whey.

2. The name of a faction.

The south-west counties of Scotland have seldom corn enough to serve them round the year; and the northern part producing more than they need, those in the west come in the summer to buy at Leith the stores that come from the north; and from a word, whiggam, used in driving their horses, all that drove were called the whiggamors, and shorter the whigs. Now in that year before the news came down of duke Hamilton's defeat, the ministers animated their people to rise and march to Edinburgh; and they came up marching on the head of their parishes with an unheard-of fury, praying and preaching all the way as they came. The marquis of Argyle and his party came and headed them, they being about six thousand. This was called the whiggamors's inroad; and ever after that, all that opposed the court came in contempt to be called whigs; and from Scotland the word was brought into England, where it is now one of our unhappy terms of diffinition.

Whoever has a true value for church and state, should avoid the extremes of whig for the sake of the former, and the extremes of tory on the account of the latter.

She'll prove herself a tory plain,

From principles the whigs maintain;

And, to defend the whiggish cause,

Her topicks from the tories draws.

I could quote passages from fifty pamphlets, wholly made up of whiggism and atheism.

WHILE. n. f. [weil, German; while, Saxon.] Time; space of time.

If my beauty be any thing, then let it obtain this much of you, that you will remain some while in this company, to ease your own travel and our solitariness. Sidney.

 You taught me but while-ere? Shakspeare, Raleigh.
 Here lies Hobbins, our shepherd whilere.
 He who, with all heav'n's heraldry, whilere
 Enter'd the world, now bleeds to give us ease. Milton.
WHILOM. adv. [Dyblom, Saxon, that is, once on a time.] Formerly; once; or old.
 Where now the studious lawyers have their bowers,
 There whilom wont the Templar knights abide,
 Till they decayed through pride. Spenser.
 In northern clime a val'rous knight
 Did whilom kill his bear in fight,
 And wound a fiddler. Hudibras.
 Yet art thou not inglorious in thy fate;
 For so Apollo, with unweeting hand,
Whilom did slay his dearly loved mate. Milton.
WHIM. n. f. [This word is derived by Skinner from a thing turning round; nor can I find any etymology more probable.] A freak; an odd fancy; a caprice; an irregular motion of desire.
 All the superfluous whims relate,
 That fill a female gamester's pate. Swift.
TO WHIMPER. v. n. [winmeren, German.] To cry without any loud noise.
 The father by his authority should always stop this sort of crying, and silence their whimpering. Locke.
 A laughing, toying, wheedling, whimpering she,
 Shall make him amble on a gossip's message. Rowe.
 In peals of thunder now the roars, and now
 She gently whimpers like a lowing cow. Swift.
WHIMPLED. adj. [I suppose from whimper.] This word seems to mean distorted with crying.
 This whimpled, whining, purblind, wayward boy,
 This signior Junio's giant dwarf, Dan Cupid,
 Regent of love-rhimes, lord of felded arms,
 Th' anointed sovereign of sighs and groans. Shakspeare.
WHIMSEY. n. f. [Only another form of the word whim.] A freak; a caprice; an odd fancy; a whim.
 At this rate a pretended freak or whimsy may be paliated.
 All the ridiculous and extravagant shapes that can be imagined, all the faucies and whimsies of poets and painters, and

Egyptian idolaters, if so be they are consistent with life and propagation, would be now actually in being, if our atheists notion were true. Ray on the Creation.
 So now, as health or temper changes,
 In larger compass Alma ranges;
 This day below, the next above,
 As light or solid whimsies move. Prior.
 What I speak, my fair Cloe, and what I write, shows
 The difference there is betwixt nature and art;
 I court others in verse, but I love thee in prose;
 And they have my whimsies, but thou hast my heart. Prior.
 Oranges in whimsy-boards went round. King.
 Lest should I dawb it o'er with transitory praise,
 And water-colours of these days;
 These days! where e'en th' extravagance of poetry
 Is at a loss for figures to express
 Men's folly, whimsies, and inconstancy. Swift.
WHIMSICAL. adj. [from whimsy.] Freakish; capricious; oddly fanciful.
 Another circumstance in which I am very particular, or, as my neighbours call me, whimsical: as my garden invites into it all the birds, I do not suffer any one to destroy their nests. Addison's Spectator.
WHIN. n. f. [chwyn, Welsh; genista spinosa, Latin.] A weed; furze.
 With whins or with furzes thy hovel renew. Tusser.

TO WHINE. v. n. [Janian, Saxon; weenen, Dutch; cuyno, Welsh.] To lament in low murmurs; to make a plaintive noise; to moan meanly and effeminately.
 They came to the wood, where the hounds were in couples Flaying their coming, but with a whining accent craving liberty. Sidney.
 At his nurse's tears
 He whin'd and roard away your victory,
 That pages blush'd at him. Shakspeare, Coriolanus.
 Twice and once the hedge-pig whin'd. Shakspeare, Macbeth.
 Whip him,
 'Till, like a boy, you see him cringe his face,
 And whine aloud for mercy. Shakspeare, Ant. and Cleopatra.
 All the common people have a whining tone and accent in their speech, as if they did still smart or suffer some oppression. Davies on Ireland.
 Then, if we whine, look pale,
 And tell our tale,
 Men are in pain
 For us again;
 So, neither speaking, doth become
 The lover's state, nor being dumb. Sackling.
 He made a viler noise than whine
 In windy weather, when they whine. Hudibras.
 Some, under sheeps cloathings, had the properties of wolves, that is, they could whine and howl as well as bite and devour. South's Sermons.
 I was not born so base to flatter crouds,
 And move your pity by a whining tale. Dryden, Don Sebastian.
 Laughing at their whining may perhaps be the proper method. Locke.
 Life was given for noble purposes; and therefore it must not be sacrificed to a quarrel, nor whined away in love. Collier.
 Upon a general mourning, mercers and woollen-draperies would in four and twenty hours raise their cloths and silks to above a double price; and, if the mourning continued long, then whining with petitions to the court, that they were ready to starve. Swift.
WHINE. n. f. [from the verb.] Plaintive noise; mean or affected complaint.
 The favourable opinion of men comes oftentimes by a few demure looks and affected whines, set off with some odd devotional postures and grimaces. South.

 Breaks in upon my sorrows, and distracts
 My jarring senses with thy beggar's cry. Rowe's Y. Shore.
TO WHINNY. v. n. [hinis, Lat. from the sound.] To make a noise like a horse or colt.
WHINYARD. n. f. [pinnan and ape, to gain honour, Saxon, Shimmer.] I know not whether this word was ever used seriously, and therefore perhaps it might be denominated in contempt from whin, a tool to cut whins.] A sword, in contempt.
 He snatch'd his whinyard up, that fled
 When he was falling off his steed. Hudibras.
TO WHIP. v. a. [weapan, Saxon; whippen, Dutch.]
 1. To strike with any thing tough and flexible.
 He took
 The harness'd steeds, that still with horror shook,
 And plies them with the lash, and whips 'em on;
 And, as he whips, upbraids 'em with his fon. Addison.
 2. To sew slightly.
 In half whipt muslin needles usefess lie. Gay.

3. To drive with lashes.
 This unheard lawfulness, and boyish troops,
 The king doth smile at; and is well prepar'd
 To whip this dwarfish war, these pigmy arms,
 From out the circle of his territories. Shakspeare, King John.
 Let's whip these stragglers o'er the seas again;
 Lash hence these over-weening rags of France,
 These famish'd beggars. Shakspeare, Richard III.
 Since I pluck'd geese, play'd truant, and whipped top, I knew not what 'twas to be beaten 'till later. Shakspeare.
 If order'd every day to whip his top, so long as to make him weary, he will wish for his book, if you promise it him as a reward of having whipped his top lustily quite out. Locke.
 To correct with lashes.
 I'll leave you to the hearing of the cause,
 Hoping you'll find good cause to whip them all. Shakspeare.
 Reason with the fellow,
 Before you punish him, where he heard this,
 Left you should chance to whip your information. Shakspeare.
 Hourly we see some raw pin-feather'd thing
 Attempt to mount, and fights and heroes sing,
 Who for false quantities was whipped at school
 But other days, and breaking grammar-rule. Dryden.
 How did he return this haughty brave,
 Who whipped the winds, and made the sea his slave? Dryden.
 This requires more than setting children a task, and whipping them without any more ado, if it be not done to our fancy. Locke.
 Oh chain me! whip me! let me be the scorn
 Of sordid rabblies and insulting crouds!
 Give me but life. Smith's Phœdra and Hippol.
 Heirs to titles and large estates have a weakness in their eyes, and are not able to bear the pain and indignity of whipping. Swift.
 5. To lash with fustian.
 They would whip me with their fine wits, 'till I was as crest fallen as a dried pear. Shakspeare, Merry Wives of Windsor.
 6. To twarp.
 Its firing hath both ends neatly lapt over with another about three inches in length, and so is firmly whipped about with final gut, that it may the easier move in the edge of the rowler. Moxon's Mach. Exer.
TO WHIP. v. a. To take any thing nimble.
 In his lawless fit,
 Behind the arras hearing something stir,
 He whips his rapier out, and cries a rat!
 And in this brainish apprehension kills
 The unseen good old man. Shakspeare, Hamlet.
 She in a hurry whips up her darling under her arm. L'Estr.
 Raise yourself upon your hinder legs, and then stretch out your head: I can easily whip up to your horns, and so out of the well. L'Estrange.
 Brisk Susan whips her linnen from the rope,
 Whilst the first drizzling shower's born aloope. Swift.
 Thus disposed, it lies ready for you to whip it out in a moment. Swift.
TO WHIP. v. n. To move nimble.
 Two friends travelling together met a bear upon the way:
 the one whipped up a tree, and the other throws himself flat upon the ground. L'Estrange.
 The simple 'quire made a sudden start to follow; but the justice of the quorum whipped between. Taller.
WHIP. n. f. [heop, Saxon.] An instrument of correction tough and pliant.
 There sat infernal pain,
 And fast beside him sat tumultuous strife;
 The one in hand an iron whip did strain,
 The other brandish'd a bloody knife. Fairy Queen.
 Put in ev'ry honest hand a whip,
 To lash the rascal naked through the world. Shakspeare, Othello.
 Love is merely madnels, and deserves as well a dark-house and a whip as madmen do. Shakspeare.
 A whip for the horse, a bridle for the ass. Prov. xxvi. 3.
 High on her head she rears two twisted snakes;
 Her chain she rattles, and her whip she shakes. Dryden.
 In his right hand he holds the whip, with which he is supposed to drive the horses of the sun. Addison.
 Each staunch polemick
 Came whip and spur, and dash'd thro' thin and thick. Dunc.
WHIPCORD. n. f. [whip and cord.] Cord of which lashes are made.
 In Raphael's first works are many small foldings, often repeated, which look like so many whipped. Dryden.
WHIPGRAFTING. n. f. [In gardening.]
Whipgrafting is done two ways: first, cut off the head of the stock, and smooth it; then cut the graft from a knot or bud on one side sloping, about an inch and a half long, with a shoulder, but not deep; that it may rest on the top of the stock: the graft must be cut from the shoudering smooth and even, sloping by degrees, that the lower end be thin: place the shoulder on the head of the stock, and mark the length of the cut part of the graft, and with your knife cut away so much of the stock as the graft did cover, but not any of the wood of the stock: place both together, that the cut part of both may join, and the sap unite the one to the other; and bind them close together, and defend them from the rain with tempered clay or wax, as before. The other way of whipgrafting is, where the grafts and the stocks are of an equal size: the stock must be cut sloping upwards from one side to the other, and the graft after the same manner from the shouder downwards, that the graft may exactly join with the stock in every part, and so bind, and clay or wax them as before. Mortimer's Husbandry.

WHIPHAND. n. f. [whip and hand.] Advantage over.
 The archangel, when discord was restive and would not be drawn from her beloved monadry with fair words, has the whit hand of her, and drags her out with many stripes. Dryden.
WHIPFLASH. n. f. The lash or small end of a whip.
WHIPPER. n. f. [from whip.] One who punishes with whipping.
 Love is meely a madnels, and deserves as well a dark-house and a whip as madmen do; and the reason why they are not to be punished is, that the whippers are in love too. Shakspeare.
WHIPPINGPOST. n. f. [whip and post.] A pillar to which criminals are bound when they are lashed.
 Could not the whippingpost prevail,
 With all its rherick, nor the jail,
 To keep from slaying scourge thy skin,
 And ankle free from iron gin? Hudibras.
WHIPSAW. n. f. [whip and saw.]
 The whipsaw is used by joiners to saw such great pieces of stuff that the hand saw will not easily reach through. Moxon.
WHIPSTAFF. n. f. [On shipboard.] A piece of wood fastened to the helm, which the steersman holds in his hand to move the helm and turn the ship. Bailey.
WHIPSTER. n. f. [from whip.] A nimble fellow.
 I am not valiant neither;
 But ev'ry puny whipster gets my sword. Shakspeare, Othello.
 Give that whipster but his errand,
 He takes my lord chief justice' warrant. Prior.
WHIPT, for whipped.
 In Bridewel a number be stript,
 Lest worthie than these to be whipt. Tusser.
TO WHIRL. v. a. [hpyran, Saxon; whirlen, Dutch.] To turn round rapidly.
 Five moons were seen to-night,
 Four fixed, and the fifth did whirl about
 The other four in wond'rous motion. Shakspeare, K. John.
 My thoughts are whirled like a potter's wheel:
 I know not where I am, nor what I do. Shakspeare, Henry VI.
 He whirls his sword around without delay,
 And hews through adverse foes an ample way. Dryden.
 With his full force he whirl'd it first around;
 But the soft yielding air receiv'd the wound. Dryden.
 With what a whirling force his lance he tosd!
 Heav'n's what a spring was in his arm to throw! Dryden.
 The Stygian flood,
 Falling from on high, with bellowing sound,
 Whirls the black waves and rattling stones around. Addison.
 With impetuous motion whirl'd apace,
 This magic wheel still moves, yet keeps its place. Gravoy.
 They have ever been taught by their senses, that the sun, with all the planets and the fixed stars, are whirled round this little globe. Watts's Improvement of the Mind.
TO WHIRL. v. n. To run round rapidly.
 He, rapt with whirling wheels, inflames the skyen,
 With fire not made to burn, but fairly for to shine. Spenser.
 As young striplings whip the top for sport
 On the smooth pavement of an empty court,
 The wooden engine flies and whirls about,
 Admir'd with clamours of the beardless rout. Dryden.
 She what he swears regards no more Than the deaf rocks when the loud billows roar;
 But whirl'd away, to shun his hateful light,
 Hid in the forest. Dryden's Zen.
 Wild and distracted with their fears,
 They jutting plunge amidst the founding deeps;
 The flood away, the struggling quadron sweeps,
 And men and arms, and horses whirling bears. Smith.
WHIRL. n. f. [from the verb.]
 1. Gyration; quick rotation; circular motion; rapid circum-volution.
 'Twere well your judgments but in plays did range;
 But ev'n your follies and debauches change
 With such a whirl, the poets of your age
 Are tir'd, and cannot score them on the stage. Dryden.
 Wings raise my feet; I'm pleas'd to mount on high;
 Trace all the mazes of the liquid sky;
 Their various turnings and their whirls declare,
 And live in the vast regions of the air. Creech's Manilius.

W H I

Nor whirl of time, nor flight of years can waste. Creach.
I have been watching what thoughts came up in the whirl of fancy, that were worth communicating. Pope.
How the car rattles, how its kindling wheels
Smoke in the whirl: the circling fand alends,
And in the noble dust the chariot's loit. Smith.
2. Any thing moved with rapid rotation.
Though in dreadful whirls we hung
High on the broken wave,
I knew thou wert not flow to heat,
Nor impotent to save. Addison's Spectator.
WHIRLBAT. n. f. [whirl and bat.] Any thing moved rapidly round to give a blow. It is frequently used by the poets for the ancient cestus.
At whirlbat he had slain many, and was now himself slain
by Pollux. L'Estrange.
The whirlbat's falling blow they nimbly shun,
And win the race ere they begin to run. Creach's Manil.
The guardian angels of kingdoms he rejected, as Dares did the whirlbats of Eryx, when they were thrown before him by Entellus. Dryden.
The whirlbat and the rapid race shall be Reserved for Cæsar, and ordain'd by me. Dryden's Virgil.
WHIRLBONE. n. f. The patella. Ainsworth.
WHIRLIGIG. n. f. [whirl and gig.] A toy which children spin round.
He found that marbles taught him percussion, and whirligigs the axis in peritrochio. Arbutn. and Pope's Mart. Scribl.
That since they gave things their beginnings,
And fet this whirligig a spinning. Prior.
WHIRLPOOL. n. f. [whirlpool, Saxon.] A place where the water moves circularly, and draws whatever comes within the circle towards its center; a vortex.
Poor Tom! whom the foul fiend hath led through ford and whirlpool, o'er bog and quagmire. Shak. King Lear.
In the fathomless profound Down sunk they, like a falling stone,
By raging whirlpools overthrown. Sandys.
This calm of heaven, this mermaid's melody,
Into an unseen whirlpool draws you fast,
And in a moment links you. Dryden's Spanish Fryar.
Send forth, ye wife! send forth your lab'ring thought:
Let it return with empty notions fraught,
Of airy columns every moment broke,
Of circling whirlpools, and of spheres of smoke. Prior.
In the matter of the chaos, whereby the atoms must be thrust and crowded to the middle of those whirlpools, and there constitute one another into great solid bodies. Bentley.
WHIRLWIND. n. f. [werbelwind, German.] A stormy wind moving circularly.
In the very torrent and whirlwind of your passion, beget a temperance that may give it smoothness. Shaksp. Hamlet.
With whirlwinds from beneath the tofs'd the ship,
And bare expos'd the bosom of the deep. Dryden's Æn.
WHIRRING. adj. A word formed in imitation of the sound expressed by it.
From the brake the whirling pheasant springs,
And mounts exulting on triumphant wings. Pope.
WHISK. n. f. [wischen, to wipe, German.]
1. A small becom, or brush.
The white of an egg, though in part transparent, yet, being long agitated with a whisk or spoon, loses its transparency. Boyle.
If you break any china with the top of the whisk on the mantle-tree, gather up the fragments. Swift.
2. A part of a woman's dress.
An easy means to prevent being one farthing the worse for the abatement of interest, is wearing a lawn whisk instead of a point de Venice. Child of Trade.
To WHISK. v. a. [wischen, to wipe, German.]
1. To sweep with a small becom.
2. To move nimbly, as when one sweeps.
Cardan believ'd great states depend Upon the tip of th' bear's tail's end;
That as the whisk'd it towards the sun,
Strow'd mighty empires up and down. Hudibras.
WHISKER. n. f. [from whisk.] The hair growing on the cheek unshaven; the mustachio.
A sacrifice to fall of state,
Whose thread of life the fatal filters
Did twist together with its whiskers. Hudibras.
Behold four kings in majesty rever'd,
With hoary whiskers and a forked beard.
A painter added a pair of whiskers to the face. Addison.
To WHISPER. v. n. [wisperen, Dutch.] To speak with a low voice, so as not to be heard but by the ear close to the speaker.
He sometime with fearful countenance would desire the king to look to himself; for that all the court and city were full of whisperings and expectation of some sudden change. Sidney.

W H I

All that hate me whisper together against me. Pf. xli. 7.
In speech of man, the whispering or fufurru, whether louder or softer, is an interior sound; but the speaking out is an exterior sound, and therefore you can never make a tone, nor sing in whispering; but in speech you may. Bacon.
The King Accetis calls;
Then softly whisper'd in her faithful ear,
And bade his daughters at the rites appear. Pope.
It is as offensive to speak wit in a fool's company, as it would be ill manners to whisper in it: he is displeased at both, because he is ignorant of what is said.
He comes and whispers in his ear.
The hollow whispering breeze, the pliant rills
Purle down amid the twisted roots. Thomson.
To WHISPER. v. a.
1. To address in a low voice.
When they talk of him they shake their heads,
And whisper one another in the ear. Shak. King John.
Give sorrow words; the grief that does not speak,
Whispers the o'erfraught heart, and bids it break. Shaksp.
He first whispers the man in the ear, that such a man should think such a card. Bacon's Natural History.
The steward whispered the young Templar, that's true to my knowledge. Taylor.
2. To utter in a low voice.
You have heard of the news abroad, I mean the whisper'd ones; for they are yet but ear-kissing arguments. Shaksp.
They might buzz and whisper it one to another, and tacitly withdrawing from the apostles, noise it about the city. Bent.
3. To prompt secretly.
Charles the emperor,
Under pretence to see the queen his aunt,
For 'twas indeed his colour, but he came To whisper Wolsey, here makes visitation. Shak. H. VIII.
WHISPER. n. f. [from the verb.] A low soft voice.
The extension is more in tones than in speech; therefore the inward voice or whisper cannot give a tone. Bacon.
Strictly observe the first hints and whispers of good and evil that pass in the heart, and this will keep conscience quick and vigilant. South.
Soft whispers through th' assembly went. Dryden.
He uncall'd, his patron to controul,
Divulg'd the secret whispers of his soul. Dryden.
WHISPERER. n. f. [from whisper.]
1. One that speaks low.
2. A private talker.
Kings trust in eunuchs hath rather been as to good spies and good whisperers than good magistrates. Bacon.
WHIST. [This word is called by Skinner, who seldom errs, an interjection commanding silence, and so it is commonly used; but Shakespeare uses it as a verb, and Milton as an adjective.]
1. Are silent.
Come unto these yellow sands,
And then take hands;
Curt'sied when you have, and kist,
The wild waves whist. Shaksp. Tempest.
2. Still; silent.
The winds, with wonder whist,
Smoothly the waters kiss'd,
Whispering new joys to the mild ocean. Milton.
3. Be still.
WHIST. n. f. A game at cards, requiring close attention and silence.
The clergyman used to play at whist and swobbers. Swift.
Whist awhile
Walks his grave round, beneath a cloud of smoke, Wreath'd fragrant from the pipe. Thomson's Autumn.
To WHISTLE. v. n. [whystlan, Saxon; sifflulo, Latin.]
1. To form a kind of musical sound by an inarticulate modulation of the breath.
I've watch'd and travell'd hard:
Some time I shall sleep out, the rest I'll whistle. Shaksp.
His big manly voice
Changing again toward childish treble pipes,
He whistles in his sound. Shaksp.
Let one whistle at the one end of a trunk, and hold your ear at the other, and the sound shall strike so sharp as you can scarce endure it. Bacon's Natural History.
While the plowman near at hand
Whistles o'er the furrow'd land. Milton.
Should Bertran sound his trumpets,
And Torrismond but whistle through his fingers,
He draws his army off. Dryden's Spanish Fryar.
He whisper'd as he went for want of thought.
The ploughman leaves the talk of days,
And trudging homeward whistles on the way. Gay.
2. To make a sound with a small wind instrument.
3. To sound shrill.
Soft whistles run along the leafy woods,
And mountains whistle to the murm'ring floods. Dryden.
Rhætus

W H I

Rhætus from the hearth a burning brand
Selects, and whirling waves; 'till from his hand
The fire took flame, then dash'd it from the right
On fair Charaxus' temples, near the fight
Then whistling past came on. Dryden.
When winged deaths in whistling arrows fly,
Wilt thou, though wounded, yet undaunted stay,
Perform thy part, and share the dangerous day?
The wild winds whistle, and the billows roar,
The splitting raft the furious tempest tore. Pope.
To WHISTLE. v. a. To call by a whistle.
Whistle them backwards and forwards, 'till he is weary. South's Sermons.
He chanced to miss his dog: we stood still 'till he had whistled him up. Addison.
When simple pride for flattery makes demands,
May dunce by dunce be whistled off my hands! Pope.
WHISTLE. n. f. [whistle, Saxon.]
1. Sound made by the modulation of the breath in the mouth.
My fire in caves constrains the wind,
Can with a breath their clam'rous rage appease;
They fear his whistle, and forsake the seas. Dryden.
2. A sound made by a small wind instrument.
3. The mouth; the organ of whistling.
Let's drink the other cup to wet our whistles, and so sing away all sad thoughts. Walton's Angler.
4. A small wind instrument.
The masters and pilots were so astonish'd that they knew not how to direct; and if they knew, they could scarcely, when they directed, hear their own whistle. Sidney.
Behold,
Upon the hempen tackle shipboys climbing;
Hear the shrill whistle, which doth order give
To sounds confus'd. Shaksp. Henry V.
Small whistles, or shepherds oaten pipes, give a sound, because of their extreme slenderness, whereby the air is more pent than in a wider pipe. Bacon's Natural History.
Her infant grandame's whistle next it grew,
The bells she gingle'd, and the whistle blew. Pope.
5. The noise of winds.
6. A call, such as sportsmen use to their dogs.
Madam, here comes my lord.
—I have been worth the whistle. Shaksp. King Lear.
The knight, pursuing this epistle,
Believ'd he'd brought her to his whistle. Hudibras.
WHISTLER. n. f. [from whistle.] One who whistles.
The prize was a guinea to be confer'd upon the ablest whistler, who could whistle clearest, and go through his tune without laughing. Addison.
WHIR. n. f. [whir, a thing; aphte, any thing, Saxon.] A point; a jot.
We love, and are no whit regarded.
The motive cause of doing it is not in ourselves, but carrieth us as if the wind should drive a feather in the air; we no whit furthering that whereby we are driven. Hooker.
Her sacred book with blood ywrit,
That none could read, except the did him teach;
She unto him disclosed every whit,
And heavenly documents therout did preach. Fairy Queen.
Although the lord became the king's tenant, his country was no whit reformed thereby, but remained in the former barbarism. Davies on Ireland.
Nature's full blessings would be well dispens'd
In unsuperfluous, even proportion,
And the no whit encumber'd with her store. Milton.
In account of ancient times it ought to satisfy any enquirer, if they can be brought any whit near one another. Tillotson.
It is every whit as honourable to assist a good minister, as to oppose a bad one. Addison's Foe-bolder, N°. 48.
WHITE. adj. [whit, Saxon; wit, Dutch.]
1. Having such an appearance as arises from the mixture of all colours; snowy.
When the paper was held nearer to any colour than to the rest, it appeared of that colour to which it approached nearest;
but when it was equally, or almost equally distant from all the colours, so that it might be equally illuminated by them all, it appeared white. Newton's Opticks.
Why round our coaches crowd the white-glov'd beaux?
Pope.
Ulysses cut a piece from the chine of the white-tooth'd boar, round which there was much fat. Brown.
2. Having the colour of fear; pale.
My hand will
That multitudinous sea incarnadine, Making the green one red. —
—My hands are of your colour, but I shame
To wear a heart to white. Shaksp. Macbeth.
3. Having the colour appropriated to happiness and innocence.
Welcome, pure-ey'd faith, white-handed hope;
Thou hovering angel girl with golden wings,
And thou unblemish'd form of chastity. Milton.

W H I

Wert thou that sweet-smiling youth?
Or that crown'd matron, fage, white-robed truth? Milton.
Let this auspicious morning be express'd
With a white stone, distinguish'd from the rest;
White as thy fame, and as thy honour clear,
And let new joys attend on thy new-added year. Dryden.
To faithful mirth be this white hour assign'd,
And sweet discourse, the banquet of the mind. Pope.
Peace o'er the world her olive-wand extend,
And white-robd innocence from heav'n descend. Pope.
4. Grey with age.
I call you servile ministers,
That have with two pernicious daughters join'd,
Your high-engender'd battles 'gainst a head
So old and white as this. Shaksp. Lear.
So minutes, hours, and days, weeks, months and years Past over, to the end they were created,
Would bring white hairs unto a quiet grave. Shaksp.
5. Pure; unblemish'd.
Unhappy Dryden! in all Charles's days,
Not common only boasts unpotted lays:
And in our own, excuse some courtly stains,
No whiter page than Addison's remains. Pope.
WHITE. n. f.
1. Whiteness; any thing white; white colour.
A friend coming to visit me, I stopp'd him at the door, and before I told him what the colours were, or what I was doing, I asked him which of the two whites were the best, and wherein they differed? and after he had at that distance view'd them well, he answer'd, that they were both good whites, and that he could not say which was best, nor wherein their colours differ'd. Newton's Opticks.
My Nan shall be the queen of all the fairies,
Finely attired in a robe of white. Shaksp.
2. The mark at which an arrow is shot.
If a mark be set up for an archer at a great distance, let him aim as exactly as he can, the least wind shall take his arrow, and divert it from the white. Dryden.
Remove him then, and all your plots fly sure Point blank, and level to the very white
Of your designs. Southern.
3. The albuginous part of eggs.
I'll fetch some flax and whites of eggs
To apply to his bleeding face. Shaksp.
The strongest repellents are the whites of new-laid eggs beaten to a froth, with alum. Wifeman's Surgery.
What principle manages the white and yolk of an egg into such a variety of textures, as is requisite to fashion a chick? Boyle.
The two in most regions represent the yolk and the membrane that lies next above it; so the exterior region of the earth is as the shell of the egg, and the abyss under it as the white that lies under the shell. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.
4. The white part of the eye.
Our general himself
Sanctifies himself with his hands,
And turns up the white o' th' eye to his discourse. Shaksp.
The horny or pellucid coat of the eye, doth not lie in the same superficies with the white of the eye, but riseth up as a hillock, above its convexity. Ray.
To WHITE. v. a. [from the adjective.] To make white; to dealbate.
His raiment became shining, exceeding white as snow; so as no fuller on earth can white them. Mar. ix. 3.
Like unto whited sepulchres, which appear beautiful outward, but are within full of dead men's bones. Matt. xxiii.
WHITELEAD. n. f.
White lead is made by taking sheet-lead, and having cut it into long and narrow slips, they make it up into rolls, but so that a small distance may remain between every spiral revolution. These rolls are put into earthen pots, so ordered that the lead may not sink down above half way, or some small matter more in them: these pots have each of them very sharp vinegar in the bottom, so full as almost to touch the lead. When the vinegar and lead have both been put into the pot, it is covered up close, and so left for a certain time; in which space the corrosive fumes of the vinegar will reduce the surface of the lead into a more white coal, which they separate by knocking it with a hammer. There are two sorts of this fold at the colour shops, the one called ceruse, which is the most pure part, and the other is called white lead. Quincy.
WHITELY. adj. [from white.] Coming near to white.
A whitey y wanton, with a velvet brow,
With two pitch-balls stuck in her face for eyes. Shaksp.
Now, governor, I see I must blush
Quite through this veil of night a whitey shame,
To think I could design to make those trees,
Who were by nature slaves. Southern's Orsonoko.

And yet are on't. Shakef. Macbeth.
10. Done or made without any consistent order or plan.
With mountains, as with weapons, arm'd; they make wild work in heav'n. Milton's Paradise Lost.
The sea was very necessary to the ends of providence, and would have been a very wild world had it been without.
Woodward's Natural History.
11. Meerly

WIN

11. Meerly imaginary.
As universal as these appear to be, an effectual remedy might be applied: I am not at present upon a wild speculative project, but such a one as may be easily put in execution. Swift.
WILD. n. f. [from the adjective.] A desert; a tract uncultivated and uninhabited.
We sometimes
Who dwell this wild, constrain'd by want come forth
To town or village nigh. Milton's Paradise Regained.
This gentle knight
Forlook his easy couch at early day,
And to the wood and wilds pursu'd his way. Dryden.
Then Libya first, of all her moisture drain'd,
Became a barren waste, a wild of sand. Addison.
Is there a nation in the wilds of Africa,
Amidst the barren rocks and burning sands
That does not tremble at the Roman name? Addison.
You rais'd these hallow'd walls; the desert smil'd,
And paradise was open'd in the wild. Pope.
WILD BASIL. n. f. [acinus, Lat.] A plant.
It hath leaves like those of the lesser basil; the cup of the flower is oblong and furrow'd; the flowers are produced in bunches on the top of little footstalks, which arise from between the footstalk of the leaf and the stalk of the plants in which it differs from cerpyllum. Miller.
WILD CUCUMBER. n. f. [elaterium, Latin.] A plant.
The branches are somewhat like those of the cucumber, but have no tendrils; the fruit is prickly, and when ripe bursts with great elasticity, and abounds with fetid juice. Miller.
WILD OLIVE. n. f. [oleagus, Latin, from olea, an olive, and agor vix;] This plant hath leaves like those of the chaste tree, and a fruit like an olive. Miller.
WILDSERVICE. n. f. [crataegus, Lat.] A plant.
The leaves are single; the flower consists of five leaves, which expand in form of a rose. The fruit is small, and shaped like a pear, in which are many hard seeds. Miller.
To WILDER. v. a. [from wild.] To loose or puzzle in an unknown or pathless tract.
The little courtiers, who ne'er come to know
The depth of factions, as in mazes go, Where interests meet, and cross so oft, that they
With too much care are wilder'd in the way. Dryden.
Oh thou! who free'st me from my doubtful state,
Long lost and wilder'd in the maze of fate,
Be present still. Pope.
WILDERNESS. n. f. [from wild.]
1. A desert; a tract of solitude and savageness.
He travell'd through wide wasteful ground,
That nought but desert wilderness shew'd all around. F. Qu.
When as the land the faw no more appear,
But a wild wilderness of waters deep,
Then 'gan she greatly to lament and weep. Spenser.
O my poor kingdom, sick with civil blows!
When that my care could not withhold thy riots,
What wilt thou do when riot is thy care?
O, thou wilt be a wilderness again,
Peopled with wolves, thy old inhabitants. Shakef.
But who can always on the billows lie?
The wat'ry wilderness yields no supply. Waller.
All those animals have been obliged to change their woods and wildernesses for lodgings in cities. Arbut. & Pope.
2. The state of being wild or disorderly. Not in use.
The paths and bow'rs, doubt not, but our joint hands
Will keep from wilderness with ease. Milton.
WILDFIRE. n. f. [wild and fire.] A composition of inflammable materials, easy to take fire, and hard to be extinguished.
When thou rann'st up Gadhill in the night to catch my horse, I did think thou had'st been an ignis fatuus, or a ball of wildfire. Shakef.
Though brimstone, pitch, wildfire, burn equally, and are hard to quench, yet they make no such fiery wind as gunpowder. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
Yet shall it in his boiling stomach turn
To bitter poison, and like wildfire burn;
He shall cast up the wealth by him devour'd.
No matter in the world so proper to write with as wildfire, as no characters can be more legible than those which are read by their own light. Addison's Guard.
In flames, like Semele's, be brought to bed,
While opening hell spouts wildfire at your head. Pope.
WILDOOSECHASE. n. f. A pursuit of something as unlikely to be caught as the wildgoose.
If our wits run the wildgoosechase, I have done; for thou hast more of the wildgoose in one of thy wits, than I have in my whole five. Shakef.
Let a man consider the time, money, and vexation, that this wildgoosechase has cost him, and then say what have I gotten to answer all this expence, but loose, giddy frolic?
L'Estrange.
WILDING. n. f. [wildelinghe, Dut.] A wild four apple.

WIN

- Ten ruddy wildings in the wood I found,
And stood on tip-toes, reaching from the ground. Dryd.
The red streak, of all cyder fruit, hath obtained the preference, being but a kind of wilding, never pleasing to the palate. Mortimer.
The wilding's fibres are contriv'd
To draw th' earth's purest spirit, and resist
Its feculence. Phillips.
WILDLY. adv. [from wild.]
1. Without cultivation.
That which grows wildly of itself, is worth nothing. More.
2. With disorder; with perturbation or distraction.
Put your discourse into some frame, and start not so wildly
from my affair. Shakef.
Mrs. Page, at the door, sweating, blowing, and looking wildly, would needs speak with you. Shakef.
Young mothers wildly stare with fear oppress'd,
And strain their helpless infants to their breast. Dryden.
His fever being come to a height, he grew delirious, and talked very wildly. Female Quixote.
3. Without attention; without judgment.
As th' unthought accident is guilty
Of what we wildly do, so we profess
Ourselves to be the slaves of chance, and flies
Of every wind that blows. Shakef.
4. Irregularly.
She, wildly wanton, wears by night away
The sign of all our labours done by day. Dryden.
WILINESS. n. f. [from wild.]
1. Rudeness; disorder like that of uncultivated ground.
The heath, which was the third part of our plot, I wish to be framed, as much as may be, to a natural wiliness. Bac.
2. Inordinate vivacity; irregularity of manners.
This fame starved justice hath done nothing but prated to me of the wiliness of his youth, and the feats he hath done about Turnbal street; and every third word a lie. Shakef.
He is giv'n
To sports, to wiliness, and much company. Shakef.
3. Savageness; brutality.
He came in like a wild man; but such a wiliness as shewed his eye-sight had tamed him, full of withered leaves; which though they fell not, still threatened falling. Sidney.
Vainly thou tell'st me, what the woman's care Shall in the wiliness of the wood prepare. Prior.
4. Uncultivated state.
Their wiliness lose, and quitting nature's part,
Obey the rules and discipline of art. Dryden.
5. Deviation from a settled course; irregularity.
A delirium is but a short wiliness of the imagination; and a settled irregularity of fancy is distraction and madness. Watts's Log.
6. Alienation of mind.
Ophelia, I wish
That your good beauties be the happy cause
Of Hamlet's wiliness; so shall I hope your virtues
May bring him to his wonted way again. Shakef.
WILE. n. f. [pile, Saxon; wiel, Islandick.] A deceit; a fraud; a trick; a stratagem; a practice artful, sly, and infi-dious.
Their leader by his wiles had much obtain'd,
And done much mischief on the English state. Daniel.
My sentence is for open war; of wiles
More unexpert, I boast not; them let those Contrive who need. Milton.
Life essay'd the surest wile,
Gilding itself with Laura's smile. Roscommon.
So Sforza, curs'd with a too fertile brain,
Lost by his wiles the pow'r his wit did gain. Dryd.
The heart of man is so full of wiles, artifices, and deceit, that there is no guessing at what he is from his speeches.
Addison's Guardian.
Wisdom's above suspecting wiles.
The queen of learning gravely smiles. Swift.
WILFUL. adj. [will and ful.]
1. Stubborn; contumacious; perverse; inflexible.
2. Done or suffered by design.
Sthenobœa herself did choak
With wilful cord, for wanting of her will. Fairy Queen.
Thou to me
Art all things under heav'n, all places thou,
Who for my wilful crime art banish'd hence. Milton.
The silent stranger stood amaz'd to see Contempt of wealth, and wilful poverty. Dryden.
WILFULLY. adv. [from wilful.]
1. Obstinate; stubbornly.
The mother, who being determinately, least I should say of a great lady wilfully, bent to marry her to Demagoras, tried all ways which a witty and hard-hearted mother could devise. Sidney.
Evil could she conceal her fire, and wilfully perverted
she in it. Sidney.

WIL

- Religion is matter of our free choice; and if men will obstinately and wisfully set themselves against it, there is no remedy. Tillotson's Serm.
2. By design; on purpose.
That will carry us, if we do not wisfully betray our succours, through all difficulties. Hammond.
If you do not wisfully pass over any of your greater offences, but confess particularly, and repent seriously of them, God will more easily pass by your lesser infirmities. Bp Tayl.
This let him know;
Left, wisfully offending, he pretend Surprised. Milton.
- WILFULNESS. n. f. [from wisful.] Obstinacy; stubbornness; perverseness.
So full of wisfulness and self-liking is our nature, that without some definitive sentence, which being given, may stand, small hope there is that trifles will end. Hooker.
Thy causeless ruth repels;
He that his sorrow sought through wisfulness,
And his foe fetter'd would release again,
Deserves to taste his folly's fruit. Fairy Queen.
Never hydra-headed wisfulness;
So soon did lose his feat, and all at once,
As in this king. Shakespeare.
A stiff and stubborn obstinacy, is not so much firmness and resolution, as wisfulness. L'Estrange.
That is not hastily to be interpreted obstinacy or wisfulness, which is the natural product of their age. Locke.
- WILLY. adv. [from wily.] By stratagem; fraudulently.
They did work willy, and went and made as if they had been ambassadors. Jef.
- WILYNESS. n. f. [from wily.] Cunning; guile.
The ungodly, for his own lust, doth persecute the poor; let them be taken in the crafty wilings that they have imagined. Psal. x. 2.
She supplied the weakness of force by wilings of art, and advantage of treaty. How. Voc. Forest.
- WILL. n. f. [pilla, Saxon; wille, Dutch.]
1. Choice; arbitrary determination.
Will is the power, which the mind has to order the consideration of any idea, or the forbearing to consider it, or to prefer the motion of any part of the body to its rest, and vice versa. Locke's Works.
Two principal fountains there are of human actions, knowledge and will; which will, in things tending towards any end, is termed choice. Hooker, b. i.
Is it her nature, or is it her will,
To be so cruel to an humble foe?
If nature, then she may it mend with skill;
If will, then she at will may will forego. Spenser.
These things have a shew of wisdom in will worship and humility. Col. ii. 23.
Will holds the sceptre in the soul,
And on the passions of the heart doth reign. Sir J. Dav.
The truth is, such a man understands by his will, and believes a thing true or false, merely as it agrees or disagrees with a violent inclination; and therefore, whilst that inclination lasts in its strength, he discovers nothing of the different degrees of evidence. Atterbury.
2. Discretion; choice.
Go then the guilty at thy will chastize. Pope.
3. Command; direction.
At his first sight the mountains are shaken, and at his will the fourth wind bloweth. Ecclef. xliii. 16.
4. Disposition; inclination; desire.
I make bold to press upon you with so little preparation. Your welcome; what's your will? Shakespeare.
He hath a will, he hath a power to perform. Drummond.
He said, and with so good a will to die,
Did to his breast the fatal point apply,
It found his heart. Dryden.
5. Power; government.
Deliver me not over unto the will of mine enemies. Psal.
He had the will of his maid before he could go; he had the mastery of his parents ever since he could prattle; and why, now he is grown up, must he be restrained? Locke.
6. Divine determination.
I would give a thousand furlongs of sea for an acre of barren ground. The wills above be done; but I would fain die a dry death. Shakespeare.
7. Testament; disposition of a dying man's effects.
Another branch of their revenue still Remains, beyond their boundless right to kill,
Their father yet alive, impower'd to make a will. Dryd.
Do men make their last wills by word of mouth only? Stephen's Sermons.
8. Good-will. Favour; kindness.
I'll to the doctor, he hath my good-will,
And none but he to marry with Nan Page. Shakespeare.
9. Good-will. Right intention.
Some preach Christ of envy, and some of good will. Phil. i. 15.

WIL

10. Ill-will. Malice; malignity.
11. [Contracted from William.] Will with a wife, Jack with a lantern.
Will with the wife is of a round figure, in bigness like the flame of a candle; but sometimes broader, and like a bundle of twigs set on fire. It sometimes gives a brighter light than that of a wax-candle; at other times more obscure, and of a purple colour. When viewed near at hand, it shines less than at a distance. They wander about in the air, not far from the surface of the earth; and are more frequent in places that are unctuous, mouldy, and are more frequent with reeds. They haunt burying places, places of execution, dunghills. They commonly appear in summer, and at the beginning of autumn, and are generally at the height of about six feet from the ground. Now they dilate themselves, and now contract. Now they go on like waves, and rain as it were sparks of fire; but they burn nothing. They follow those that run away, and fly from those that follow them. Some that have been caught were observed to consist of a shining, viscous, and gelatinous matter, like the spawn of frogs, not hot or burning, but only shining; so that the matter seems to be phosphorus, prepared and raised from putrified plants or carcasses by the heat of the sun; which is condensed by the cold of the evening, and then shines. Muscl.
Will-a-wisp misleads night-faring clowns,
O'er hills and sinking bogs. Gay.
- To WILL. v. a. [wiltgon, Gothick; pillan, Saxon; willen, Dutch.]
1. To desire that any thing should be, or be done.
To will, is to bend our souls to the having or doing of that which they see to be good. Hooker.
Let Richard be restored to his blood,
As will the rest; so willets Winchester. Shakespeare.
I speak not of God's determining his own will, but his pre-determining the acts of our will. There is as great difference betwixt these two, as betwixt my willing a lawful thing myself, and my inducing another man to do that which is unlawful. Hammond on Fundamentals.
Whoever wills the doing of a thing, if the doing of it be in his power, he will certainly do it; and whoever does not do that thing, which he has in his power to do, does not properly will it. South.
A man that fits still, is said to be at liberty, because he can walk if he wills it. Locke.
2. To be inclined or resolved to have.
She's too rough for me;
There, there, Hortensio, will you any wife? Shakespeare.
3. To command; to direct.
St. Paul did will them of Corinth, every man to lay up somewhat on the Sunday, and to relieve it in store for the church of Jerusalem, for the relief of the poor there. Hooker.
How rarely does it meet with this time's guide,
When man was willed to love his enemies. Shakespeare.
Our battle is more full of names than yours,
Our men more perfect in the use of arms,
Our armours all as strong, our cause the best;
Then reason wills our hearts should be as good. Shakespeare.
He willed him to be of good comfort, promising to bestow upon him whatsoever he should wish. Kneller.
If they had any business, his Majesty willed that they should attend. Cavendish.
'Tis your's, O queen! to will
The work, which duty binds me to fulfil. Dryden.
4. It has a loose and slight signification.
Let the circumstances of life be what, or where they will, a man should never neglect improvement. Watts.
5. It is one of the signs of the future tense; of which it is difficult to show or limit the signification.
I will come. I am determined to come; importing choice.
Thou wilt come. It must be so that thou must come; importing necessity.
Will thou come? Hast thou determined to come? importing choice.
He will come. He is resolved to come; or it must be that he must come, importing either choice or necessity.
It will come. It must be so that it must come; importing necessity.
The plural follows the analogy of the singular.
WILL and WIL, among the English Saxons, as wiele at this day among the Germans, signified many. So willimus is the defender of many; wilfrid, peace to many; which are answered in sense and signification by Polymachus, Poly-crates, and Polyphilus. Gib. Comad.
- WILLING. adj. [from will.]
1. Inclined to any thing.
He willing to please one in authority, forced all his skill to make the resemblance of the best fashion. Watts.
Some other able, and as willing, pays
The rigid satisfaction. Milton.
Can any man trust a better support under affliction, than the friendship of Omnipotence, who is both able and willing, Bentley.
and knows how to relieve him? a. Pleas'd;

WIL

2. Pleas'd; desirous.
3. Favourable; well disposed to any thing.
3. As many as were willing hearted brought bracelets and ear-rings. Ex. xxxv. 22.
4. Ready; complying.
Religion hath force to qualify all sorts of men, to make governors the apter to rule with conscience, inferiors for conscience sake the willing to obey. Hooker.
We've willing dames enough. Shakespeare.
He stoop'd with weary wings and willing feet. Milt.
5. Chosen.
They're held with his melodious harmony,
In willing chains, and sweet captivity. Milton.
6. Spontaneous.
Forbear, if thou hast pity,
These groans proceed not from a senseless plant,
No spouts of blood run willing from a tree. Dryden.
7. Consenting.
How can hearts not free serve willing. Milton.
- WILLINGLY. adv. [from will.]
1. With one's own consent; without dislike; without reluctance.
That preservation of peace and unity amongst Christian churches should be by all good means procured, we join most willingly and gladly with them. Hooker.
I dare not make myself so guilty,
To give up willingly that noble title
Your matter wed me to. Shakespeare.
This ransom, if my whole inheritance
May compass, it shall willingly be paid. Milton.
2. By one's own desire.
The condition of that people is not so much to be envied as some would willingly represent it. Addison.
- WILLINGNESS. n. f. [from willing.] Consent; freedom from reluctance; ready compliance.
We praise the things we hear with much more willingness, than those we see; because we envy the present, and reverence the past; thinking ourselves instructed by the one, and overlaid by the other. Ben. Johnson.
It is not doing good after that same wonderful manner, that Christ's example obligeth us unto, but to a like willingness and readiness to do good as far as our power reacheth. Calamy.
Force never yet a generous mind did gain;
We yield on parley; but are storm'd in vain;
Constraint, in all things, makes the pleasure less,
Sweet is the love which comes with willingness. Dryden.
- WILLOW. n. f. [pelie, Saxon; salix, Lat. givilow, Welsh.] A tree worn by forlorn lovers.
It hath amentaceous flowers consisting of several stamina, which are collected into a spike but are barren. The embryos are produced upon different trees from the male flowers, and afterwards become a fruit or husk, shaped like a cone, opening in two parts, and containing downy seeds. Mil.
I offered him my company to a willow tree, to make him a garland, as being forsaken, to bind him up a rod, as being worthy to be whipt.
In such a night
Stood Dido with a willow in her hand
Upon the wild sea banks. Shakespeare.
Tell him, in hope he'll prove a widower shortly,
I wear the willow garland for his sake. Shakespeare.
When heaven's burning eye the fields invades,
To marishes he resorts, obscur'd with reeds,
And hoary willows, which the moisture feeds. Sandy.
Afflicted Israel shall sit weeping down,
Their harps upon the neighbouring willows hung,
Nor joyous hymn encouraging their tongue. Prior.
- WILLOWISH. adj. [willom.] Resembling the colour of willow. Make his body with greenish coloured crewel, or willowish colour. Walton.
- WILLOWWORT. n. f. A plant.
The flower consists of several leaves, produced from the inclosures of the flower-cup, placed circularly, and expanded like a rose; from the centre of the flower-cup rises the pointal, which becomes a fruit of two cells, full of small seeds, wrapped up in the flower-cup. Miller.
- WILY. adj. [from wile.] Cunning; sly; full of stratagem; fraudulent.
They are so cautious and wily headed, especially being men of small practice in law matters, that you would wonder whence they borrow such subtilities and shifts. Spenser.
In the wily snake
Whatever slights, none would suspicions mark
As from his wit, and native subtilty Proceeding. Milton's Par. Lost.
Since this false, wily, doubling disposition of mind, is so intolerably mischievous to society, God is sometimes pleas'd, in mere compassion to men, to give them warning of it, by setting some odd mark upon such Cains. South's Serm.
My wily nurse by long experience found,
And first discover'd to my soul its wound;
'Tis love laid the wily Dryden.
- WIMBLE. n. f. [wimpe], old Dutch, from wimelen, to bore.] An instrument with which holes are bored.

WIN

- At harvest-home, trembling to approach
The little barrel, which he fears to broach:
He 'says the wimble, often draws it back,
And deals to thirsty servants but a smack. Dryd.
As when a shipwright stands his workmen o'er,
Who ply the wimble some huge beam to bore;
Urg'd on all hands it nimbly spins about,
The grain deep-piercing till it scoops it out. Pope.
The trepan is like a wimble, used by joiners. Sharp.
- WIMBLE. adj. Active; nimble; shifting to and fro. Such seems to be the meaning here.
He was so wimble and so wight,
From bough to bough he leaped light,
And oft the pumies latched:
Therewith afraid I ran away;
But he that earst seem'd but to play,
A shaft in earnest snatched. Spenser.
- WIMPLE. n. f. [guimpe, Fr.] A hood; a veil. It is printed in Spenser perhaps by mistake wimble.
So fair and fresh, as fairest flower in May,
For she had laid her mournful stole aside,
And widow-like sad wimble thrown away. Fair y 2.
The Lord will take away the changeable suits of apparel, and the wimples, and the crisping-pins. Israel ii. 22.
- To WIMPLE. v. a. To draw down as a hood or veil.
The fame did hide,
Under a veil that wimble was full low. Fairy 2.
- WIN. Whether initial or final in the names of men, may either denote a masculine temper, from pin, which signifies in Saxon, war, strength, &c. or else the general love and esteem he hath among the people; from the Saxon pine, i. e. dear, beloved. In the name of places it implies a battle fought there. Gibb.
- To WIN. v. a. [Pret. won and won; part. past. won, pinna, Saxon; winnen, Dutch.]
1. To gain by conquest.
The town of Gaza where the enemy lay encamped, was not so strong but it might be won. Kneller.
His whole descent, who thus shall Canaan win. Milton.
Follow cheerful to the trembling town;
Preis but an entrance, and presume it won. Dryden.
2. To gain the victory in a contest.
Loyalty is still the same
Whether it win or lose the game:
True as the dial to the sun,
Altho' it be not shin'd upon. Hudibras, b. iii.
I five years at Tarentum won
The questorship, and then our love began. Denham.
Thy well breath'd horse
Impels the flying car and wins the course. Dryd.
3. To gain something withheld.
Resolv'd to win, he meditates the way,
By force to ravish, or by fraud betray. Pope.
4. To obtain.
Thy virtue won me; with virtue preserve me. Dost thou love me? Keep me then still worthy to be beloved. Sidney.
When you see my son, tell him, that his sword can never win the honour that he loses. Shakespeare.
Devilish Macbeth
By many of these trains hath fought to win me. Shak.
5. To gain by play.
He had given a disagreeable vote in parliament, for which reason not a man would have so much correspondence with him as to win his money. Addison.
6. To gain by persuasion.
They win great numbers to receive
With joy the tidings brought from heav'n. Milton.
7. To gain by courtship.
She's beautiful; and therefore to be woo'd:
She is a woman, therefore to be won. Shakespeare.
That flood witness'd his inconstant flame,
When thus he swore, and won the yielding dame. Gay.
- To WIN. v. n.
1. To gain the victory.
Nor is it ought but just,
That he who in debate of truth hath won,
Should win in arms. Milton.
2. To gain influence or favour.
You express yourself very desirous to win upon the judgment of your matter, and not upon his affections only. Bacon.
You have a softness and beneficence winning on the hearts of others. Dryden.
Thy words like music every breast controul;
Steal thro' the air, and win upon the soul. Pope.
3. To gain ground.
The rabble will in time win upon power. Shakespeare.
4. To be conqueror or gainer at play.
Charles I will play no more to night;
My mind's not on't, you are too hard for me.
—Sir, I did never win of you before.
—But little, Charles;
Nor shall not when my fancy's on my play. Shak.
To

WIN

To WINCE. v. n. [guings, Welsh.] To kick as impatient of a rider, or of pain.
I will sit as quiet as a lamb,
I will not stir, nor wince, nor speak a word.
Room, room, for my horse will wince,
If he came within so many yards of a prince.
The angry beast did straight resent
The wrong done to his fundament,
Began to kick, and fling, and wince,
As if he had been beside his sense.
WINCH. n. f. [guincher, French, to twist.] A windlace; something held in the hand by which a wheel or cylinder is turned.
Put a winch with the wheel.
To WINCH. v. a. [The same with wince, or perhaps from guincher, French, to twist; winch signifying sometimes to writhe or contort the body.] To kick with impatience; to shrink from any uneasiness.
We who have free souls,
It touches not, let the gall'd jade wince;
Our withers are unwrung.
Have these bones rattled, and this head
So often in thy quarrel bled!
Nor did I ever wince or grudge it.
This last allusion gaul'd the panther more;
Yet seem'd she not to wince, tho' shrewdly pain'd.
Their consciences are gall'd, and this makes them wince and fling, as if they had some mettle.
WINDPIPE. n. f.
There is a small red flower in the stubble-fields, which country people call the windpipe; which if it open in the morning, you may be sure, a fair day will follow.
WIND. n. f. [pinb, Saxon; wind, Dutch; gwynt, Welsh.]
1. Wind is when any tract of air moves from the place it is in, to any other, with an impetus that is sensible to us, wherefore it was not ill called by the ancients, a swifter course of air; a flowing wave of air; a flux, effusion, or stream of air.
The worthy fellow is our general. He's the rock, the oak not to be wind-shaken.
Love's heralds should be thoughts,
Which ten times faster glides than the sun beams,
Driving back shadows over lowering hills.
Therefore do nimble-pinion'd doves draw love;
And therefore hath the wind-swift Cupid wings.
Falmouth lieth farther out in the trade way, and so offereth a sooner opportunity to wind-driven ships than Plymouth.
Wind is nothing but a violent motion of the air, produced by its rarefaction, more in one place than another, by the sunbeams, the attractions of the moon, and the combinations of the earth's motions.
2. Direction of the blast from a particular point. As eastward;
westward.
I'll give thee a wind.
I myself have all the other,
And the very points they blow;
All the quarters that they know
T' th' shipman's card.
3. Breath; power or act of respiration.
If my wind were but long enough to say my prayers, I would repent.
His wind he never took whilst the cup was at his mouth,
but justly observ'd the rule of drinking with one breath.
The perfume of the flowers, and their virtues to cure shortness of wind in purify old men, seems to agree most with the orange.
It stop'd at once the passage of his wind,
And the free soul to flitting air resign'd.
4. Air caused by any action.
On each side her
Stood pretty dimpled boys, like smiling Cupids
With divers colour'd fans, whose wind did seem
To glow the delicate cheeks which they did cool.
In an organ, from one blast of wind,
To many a row of pipes the found-board breathes.
5. Breath modulated by an instrument.
Where the air is pent, there breath or other blowing, which carries but a gentle percussion, suffices to create found;
as in pipes and wind instruments.
Their instruments were various in their kind,
Some for the bow, and some for breathing wind.
6. Air impregnated with scent.
A hare had long escap'd pursuing hounds,
By often shifting into distant grounds,
Till finding all his artifices vain,
To save his life, he leap'd into the main.
But there, alas! he could no safety find,
A pack of dog-fish had him in the wind.
7. Flatulence; windiness.
It turns
Wisdom to folly, as nourishment to wind.

8. Any thing insignificant or light as wind.
Think not with wind of airy threats to awe.
9. Down the WIND. To decay.
A man that had a great veneration for an image in his house, found that the more he prayed to it to prosper him in the world, the more he went down the wind still.
10. To take or have the WIND. To gain or have the upper-hand.
Let a king in council beware how he opens his own inclinations too much, for else counsellors will but take the wind of him; instead of giving free counsel.
To WIND. v. a. [pinban, Sax. winden, Dutch. from the noun.]
1. To blow; to found by inflation.
The squire 'gan nigher to approach,
And wind his horn upon the castle wall,
That with the noise it shook as it would fall.
Every Triton's horn is winding,
Welcome to the wat'ry plain.
Ye vigorous swains! while youth ferments your blood,
Wind the thrill horn, or spread the waving net.
2. To turn round; to twist.
Nero could touch and time the harp well; but in government sometimes he used to wind the pins too high, and sometimes let them down too low.
The figure of a sturdy woman done by Michael Angelo, washing and winding of linen cloaths, in which act the wings out the water that made the fountain.
Wind the wood-bine round this arbour.
3. To regulate in action.
He vaulted with such ease into his seat,
As if an angel dropt down from the clouds,
To turn and wind a piny genius,
And witch the world with noble horsemanship.
In a commonwealth or realm,
The government is call'd the helm;
With which, like vessels under sail,
They're turn'd and winded by the tail.
4. To nose; to follow by scent.
To turn by shifts or expedients.
Whence turning of religion's made
The means to turn and wind a trade.
5. To introduce by insinuation.
You have contriv'd to take
From Rome all feason'd offices, and to wind Yourself into a power tyrannical.
Edmund, seek him out, wind me into him, frame the business after your own wisdom.
Little arts and dexterities they have to wind in such things into discourse.
6. To change.
Were our legislature vested in the prince, he might wind and turn our constitution at his pleasure, and shape our government to his fancy.
7. To entwine; to enclose; to encircle.
Sleep thou and I will wind thee in my arms.
You know me well, and herein spend but time
To wind about my love with circumstance.
8. To wind up. To raise by degrees.
These he did so wind up to his purpose that they withdrew from the court.
When they could not coolly convince him, they rail'd, and called him an heretic: thus they wound up his temper to a pitch, and treacherously made use of that infirmity.
9. To wind up. To straiten a string by turning that on which it is rolled; to put in tune.
Hylas! why fit we mute,
Now that each bird saluteth the spring?
Wind up the slacken'd strings of thy lute,
Never canst thou want matter to sing.

WIN

Your lute may wind its strings but little higher
To tune their notes to that immortal quire.
To WIND UP. To put in order for regular action: from a watch.
O you kind gods!
Cure this great breach of his abused nature;
Th' untun'd and jarring senses, O, wind up,
Of this child chang'd father.
The weyrd sisters, hand in hand,
Pottery of the sea and land,
Thus do go about, about,
Thrice to thine, and thrice to mine,
And thrice again to make up nine:
Peace, the charm's wound up.
To WIND. v. n.
1. To turn; to change.
So swift your judgments turn and wind,
You cast our fleetest wit a mile behind.
2. To turn; to be convolved.
Some plants can support themselves, and some others creep along the ground, and wind about other trees, and cannot support themselves.
Stalks of a solid newel spread only upon one small newel, as the several folds of fans spread about their center; but these, because they sometimes wind, and sometimes fly off from that winding, take more room up in the stair-case.
3. To move round.
If aught obstruct thy course, yet stand not still,
But wind about, 'till thou hast topp'd the hill.
4. To proceed in flexures.
It shall not wind with such a deep indent,
As rob me of so rich a bottom here.
He winds with ease
Through the pure marble air his oblique way,
Amongst innumerable stars.
It was a rock winding with one ascent.
The silver Thames, her own domestick flood,
Shall bear her vessels, like a sweeping train;
And often wind, as of his mistress proud,
With longing eyes to meet her face again.
You that can search those many corner'd minds,
Where woman's crooked fancy turns and winds,
Still fix thy eyes intent upon the throng,
And, as the palfies open, wind along.
Swift ascending from the azure wave,
He took the path that winded to the cave.
5. To be extricated; to be disentangled.
Long lab'ring underneath, ere they could wind
Out of such prison.
WINDBOUND. adj. [wind and bound.] Confined by contrary winds.
Yet not for this the windbound navy weigh'd;
Slack were their sails, and Neptune disobey'd.
When I bestir myself, it is high sea in his house; and when I sit still, his affairs forsooth are windbound.
Is it reasonable that our English fleet, which used to be the terror of the ocean, should be windbound?
WINDEGG. n. f. An egg not impregnated; an egg that does not contain the principles of life.
Sound eggs sink, and such as are addled swim; as do also those termed hypenemia, or windeggs.
WINDER. n. f. [from wind.]
1. An instrument or person by which any thing is turned round.
To keep troublesome servants out of the kitchen, leave the winder sticking on the jack to fall on their heads.
2. A plant that twists itself round others.
Plants that put forth their sap hastily, have their bodies not proportionable to their length; and therefore they are winders and creepers, as ivy and bryony.
WINDFALL. n. f. [wind and fall.] Fruit blown down from the tree.
Gather now, if ripe, your Winter fruits, as apples, to prevent their falling by the great winds; also gather your windfalls.
WINDFLOWER. n. f. The anemone. A flower.
WINDGALL. n. f. [wind and gall.]
Windgalls are soft, yielding, flatulent tumours or bladders, full of corrupt jelly, which grow upon each side of the fet-lock joints, and are so painful in hot weather and hard ways, that they make a horse to halt. They are caused by violent fraining, or by a horse's standing on a sloping floor, or from extreme labour and heat, or by blows.
His horse infected with the falshion, full of windgalls, and sped with pavins.
WINDGUN. n. f. [wind and gun.] Gun which discharges the bullet by means of wind compressed.
The windgun is charged by the forcible compression of air, being injected through a syringe; the strike and distention of the imprisoned air serving, by the help of little falls or shuts within, to stop and keep close the vents by which it was admitted.

WIN

Forc'd from windguns, lead itself can fly,
And wondrous flugs cut swiftly through the sky.
WINDINESS. n. f. [from windy.]
1. Fulness of wind; flatulence.
A windiness and puffing up of your stomach after dinner,
and in the morning.
Orifices are prepared for the letting forth of the rarefied spirits in ructus, or windings, the common effects of all fermented liquors.
2. Tendency to generate wind.
Sena loseth somewhat of its windiness by decocting; and,
generally, subtle or windy spirits are taken off by incension or evaporation.
3. Tumour; puffiness.
From this his modest and humble charity, virtues which rarely cohabit with the swelling windiness of much knowledge, issued this.
WINDING. n. f. [from wind.] Flexure; meander.
It was the pleasantest voyage in the world to follow the windings of this river Inn, through such a variety of pleasing scenes as the course of it naturally led us.
The ways of heav'n are dark and intricate;
Our understanding traces them in vain,
Nor sees with how much art the windings run,
Nor where the regular confusion ends.
WINDINGSHEET. n. f. [wind and sheet.] A sheet in which the dead are enwrapped.
These arms of mine shall be thy windingsheet;
My heart, sweet boy, shall be thy sepulchre;
For from my heart thine image ne'er shall go.
The great windingsheets, that bury all things in oblivion, are deluges and earthquakes.
The chaste Penelope, having, as she thought, lost Ulysses at sea, employed her time in preparing a windingsheet for Laertes, the father of her husband.
WINDLASS. n. f. [wind and lass.]
1. A handle by which a rope or lace is wrapped together round a cylinder.
2. A handle by which any thing is turned.
Thus do we of wisdom and of reach,
With windlasses, and with assays of byas,
By indirections find directions out.
WINDLE. n. f. [from To wind.] A spindle.
WINDMILL. n. f. [wind and mill.] A mill turned by the wind.
We like Don Quixote do advance
Against a windmill our vain lance.
Such a failing chariot might be more conveniently framed with moveable sails, whose force may be impelled from their motion, equivalent to those in a windmill.
Windmills grind twice the quantity in an hour that water-mills do.
His fancy has made a giant of a windmill, and he's now engaging it.
WINDOW. n. f. [windue, Danish. Skinner thinks it originally wind-door.]
1. An aperture in a building by which air and light are intromitted.
Being one day at my window all alone,
Many strange things happened me to see.
A fair view her window yields,
The town, the river, and the fields.
He through a little window cast his sight,
Though thick of bars that gave a scanty light;
But ev'n that glimmering serv'd him to descry
Th' inevitable charms of Emily.
When you leave the windows open for air, leave books on the window-seat, that they may get air too.
2. The frame of glass or any other materials that covers the aperture.
To thee I do commend my watchful soul,
Ere I let fall the windows of mine eyes:
Sleeping or waking, oh defend me still!
In the sun's light, let into my darkened chamber through a small round hole in my window-shutter, at about ten or twelve feet from the window, I placed a lens.
3. Lines crossing each other.
The fav'rite, that just begins to prattle,
Is very humorfome, and makes great clutter,
'Till he has wind'ros on his bread and butter.
4. An aperture resembling a window.
To WINDOW. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To furnish with windows.
Between these half columns above, the whole room was windowed round.
With pert flat eyes she window'd well its head,
A brain of feathers, and a heart of lead.
2. To place at a window.
Wouldst thou be window'd in great Rome, and see Thy master thus with placeth arms, bending down
His corrigible neck, his face subdu'd
To penetrative shame?

WIN

3. To break into openings.
Poor naked wretches, where'er you are,
That bide the pelting of this pitiless storm,
How shall your boufeful heads, and unfed fides,
Your loop'd and window'd raggedness, defend you
From seasons such as these? Shak. King Lear.
- WINDPIPE. n. f. [wind and pipe.] The passage for the breath;
the aspera arteria.
Let gallows gape for dogs, let man go free,
And let not hemp his windpipe suffocate. Shak. H. V.
The wezzon, rough artery, or windpipe, is a part inservient to voice and respiration: thereby the air descendeth unto the lungs, and is communicated unto the heart. Brown.
The quacks of government, who fat
At th' unregarded helm of state,
Consider'd timely how t' withdraw,
And save their windpipes from the law. Hudibras.
Because continual respiration is necessary for the support of our lives, the windpipe is made with annular cartilages. Ray.
The windpipe divides itself into a great number of branches, called bronchia: these end in small air-bladders, capable to be inflated by the admission of air, and to subside at the expulsion of it. Arbutnot on Aliments.
- WINDWARD. adv. [from wind.] Towards the wind.
WINDY. adj. [from wind.]
1. Consisting of wind.
See what showers arise,
Blown with the windy tempest of my soul
Upon thy wounds, that kill mine eyes and heart. Shak. Sp.
Subtle or windy spirits are taken off by incension or evaporation. Bacon.
 2. Next the wind.
Lady, you have a merry heart.
—Yes, my lord, I thank it, poor fool,
It keeps on the windy side of care. Shak. Lear.
 3. Empty; airy.
Why should calamity be full of words?
—Windy attorneys to their client woes,
Poor breathing orators of miseries. Shak. Rich. III.
What windy joy this day had I conceiv'd,
Hopeful of his deliver, which now proves Abortive as the first-born bloom of Spring, Nipt with the lagging rear of Winter's frost. Milton.
Look, here's that windy applause, that poor transitory pleasure, for which I was dishonoured. South.
Of ev'ry nation, each illustrious name
Such toys as these have cheated into fame, Exchanging solid quiet to obtain
The windy satisfaction of the brain. Dryden's Juvenal.
 4. Tempestuous; molested with wind.
On this windy sea of land the fiend
Walk'd up and down. Milton.
It is not bare agitation, but the sediment at the bottom, that troubles and defiles the water; and when we see it windy and dusty, the wind does not make but only raise dust. South.
 5. Puffy; flatulent.
In such a windy colic, water is the best remedy after a surfeit of fruit. Arbutnot on Aliments.
- WINE. n. f. [pin, Saxon; winn, Dutch.]
1. The fermented juice of the grape.
The wine of life is drawn, and the meer lees
Is left this vault to brag of. Shak. Macbeth.
Do not fall in love with me;
For I am falser than vows made in wine. Shak. H. V.
The increase of the vineyards for the wine-cellars. Chron.
Be not amongst wine-bibbers, amongst riotous eaters. Prov.
Thy garments like him that treadeth in the wine-fat. Jf.
They took old facks upon their asses, and wine-bottles old and rent, and bound up. Jf. ix. 4.
Where the wine-press is hard wrought, it yields a harsh wine that tastes of the grape-stone. Bacon.
His troops on my strong youth like torrents rush;
As in a wine-press, Judah's daughter crush'd.
With large wine-offerings pour'd, and sacred feast. Milt.
Shall I, to please another wine-sprung mind,
Lose all mine own? God hath giv'n me a measure,
Short of his canne and body: must I find
A pain in that, wherein he finds a pleasure? Herbert.
The firrings of the flock are doom'd to die;
Rich fragrant wines the cheering bowl supply. Pope.
If the hoghead falls short, the wine-cooper had not filled it in proper time. Swift's Directions to the Butler.
 2. Preparations of vegetables by fermentations, called by the general name of wines, have quite different qualities from the plant; for no fruit, taken crude, has the intoxicating quality of wine. Arbutnot.
- WING. n. f. [gehping, Saxon; wing, Danish.]
1. The limb of a bird by which it flies.
As Venus' bird, the white swift lovely dove,
Doth on her wings her utmost swiftness prove,
Finding the gripe of falcon fierce not fur. Sidney.

WIN

- Ignorance is the curse of God,
Knowledge the wing wherewith we fly to heav'n. Shak. Sp.
An eagle stirreth up her nest, spreadeth abroad her wings, taket them, and beareth them on her wings. Deut. xxxii.
A spleenless wind fo stretch
Her wings to waft us, and fo urg'd our keel. Chapman.
The prince of augurs, Heliothes, rose;
Precient he view'd th' aerial tracts, and drew
A sure preface from ev'ry wing that flew. Pope's Odyssey.
2. A fan to winnow.
Wing, cartnave, and bushel, peck, ready at hand. Taffer.
 3. Flight; passage by the wing.
Light thickens, and the crow
Makes wing to th' rooky wood:
Good things of day begin to droop and drowse,
While night's black agents to their prey do rouse. Shak.
Thy affections hold a wing
Quite from the flight of all thy ancestors. Shak. H. IV.
I have pursued her as love hath pursued me, on the wing of all occasions. Shak. Merry Wives of Windsor.
While passion is upon the wing, and the man fully engaged in the prosecution of some unlawful object, no remedy or controul is to be expected from his reason. South.
You are too young your power to understand;
Lovers take wing upon the least command. Dryden.
And straight, with in-born vigour, on the wing,
Like mounting larks, to the new morning sing. Dryden.
Then life is on the wing; then most the finks,
When most she seems reviv'd. Smith's Phœdra and Hippol.
 4. The motive of flight.
Fearful commenting
Is leaden servitor to dull delay;
Delay leads impotent and snail-pac'd beggary:
Then fiery expedition be my wing,
Jove's Mercury, and herald for a king. Shak. R. III.
 5. The fide bodies of an army.
The footmen were Germans, to whom were joined as wings certain companies of Italians. Knalles's Hist. of the Turk.
The left wing put to flight,
The chiefs o'erborn, he rushes on the right. Dryden.
 6. Any fide piece.
The plough most proper for stiff black clays is long, large, and broad, with a deep head and a square earth-board, the coulter long and very little bending, with a very large wing.
Mortimer's Husbandry.
- To WING. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To furnish with wings; to enable to fly.
The speed of gods
Time counts not, tho' with swiftest minutes wing'd. Milt.
Who knows but he, whose hand the lightning forms,
Who heaves old ocean, and who wings the storms,
Pours fierce ambition in a Caesar's mind,
Or turns young Ammon loose to scourge mankind. Pope.
 2. To supply with fide bodies.
We ourself will follow
In the main battle, which on either fide Shall be well winged with our chiefest horse. Shak. R. III.
- To WING. v. n. To pass by flight.
1. I, an old turtle,
Will wing me to some wither'd bough, and there
My mate, that's never to be found again, Lament 'till I am lost. Shak. Lear's Tale.
Warm'd with more particles of heav'nly flame,
He wing'd his upward flight, and soar'd to fame;
The rest remain'd below, a crowd without a name. Dryd.
Struck with the horror of the fight,
She turns her head, and wings her flight. Prior.
From the Meotis to the northern sea,
The goddess wings her desolate way. Prior.
 - WINGED. adj. [from wing.] Furnished with wings; flying;
swift; rapid.
Now we bear the king
Tow'rd Calais: grant him there, and there being seen,
Heave him away upon your winged thoughts
Athwart the sea. Shak. Henry V.
Hie, good fir Michael, bear this sealed brief
With winged haste to the lord marshal. Shak. H. IV.
And shall grace not find means, that finds her way,
The speediest of thy winged messengers,
To visit all thy creatures? Milton's Paradise Lost.
We can fear no force
But winged troops, or Pegasean horse. Waller.
The winged lion's not so fierce in fight,
As Lib'ri's hand presents him to our sight. Waller.
The cockney is surpris'd at many actions of the quadruped and winged animals in the fields. Watt.
- WINGEDPEAK. n. f. [cocrus, Latin.] A plant.
It hath a papilionaceous flower, out of whose empalement rises the pointal, which afterwards becomes a pod, for the most part round and cylindrical, filled with roundish seeds.
Miller.

WIN

- WING-SHELL. n. f. [wing and shell.] The shell that covers the wing of insects.
The long-shelled goat-chaffer is above an inch long, and the wing-shells of themselves an inch, and half an inch broad; fo deep as to come down below the belly on both fides. Grew.
- WINGY. adj. [from wing.] Having wings.
They spring together out, and swiftly bear
The flying youth through clouds and yielding air;
With wingy speed out-strip the eastern wind,
And leave the breezes of the morn behind. Addison.
- To WINK. v. n. [pinetran, Saxon; wincken, Dutch.]
1. To shut the eyes.
Let's see thine eyes; wink now, now open them:
In my opinion, yet, thou see'st not well. Shak. Hen. VI.
They're fairies; that that speaks to them shall die:
I'll wink and couch; no man their sports must eye. Shak.
His false cunning
Taught him to face me out of his acquaintance,
And grew a twenty years removed thing.
While one would wink. Shak. Twelfth Night.
He with great imagination,
Proper to madmen, led his pow'rs to death. Shak. H. IV.
And, winking, leap'd into destruction.
In despite of all this, he runs foolishly into his fin and ruin, merely because he winks hard, and rushes violently like a horse into the battle. Taylor.
The Scripture represents wicked men as without understanding; not that they are destitute of the natural faculty:
they are not blind, but they wink.
If any about them should make them think there is any difference between being in the dark and winking, get it out of their minds. Locke.
 2. To hint, or direct by the motion of the eyelids.
You saw my master wink and laugh upon you. Shak. Sp.
Send him a spoon when he wants a knife: wink at the footman to leave him without a plate. Swift.
 3. To close and exclude the light.
While Hermes pip'd and fung, and told his tale,
The keeper's winking eyes began to fail,
And drowsily lumber on the lids to creep,
'Till all the watchman was at length asleep. Dryden.
When you shoot, and shut one eye,
You cannot think he would deny
To lend the other friendly aid,
Or wink, as coward, and afraid. Prior.
 4. To connive; to seem not to see; to tolerate.
They be better content with one that will wink at their faults, than with him that will reprove them. Whitgift.
I, for winking at your discords too,
Have lost a brace of kinsmen. Shak. Romeo and Juliet.
Let not night see my black and deep desires;
The eye wink at the hand! Shak. Macbeth.
The king gave him great gifts, and winked at the great spoil of Bosworth-field, which came almost wholly to this man's hands. Bacon's Henry VII.
Let us not write at a loose rambling rate,
In hope the world will wink at all our faults.
Some faults of course with childhood end;
We therefore wink at wags, when they offend,
And spare the boy, in hopes the man may mend. Dryden.
Obstinacy cannot be winked at, but must be subdued. Locke.
Cato is stern, and awful as a god:
He knows not how to wink at human frailty,
Or pardon weaknels that he never felt. Addison's Cato.
 5. To be dim.
The fullen tyrant slept not all the night,
But, lonely walking by a winking light,
Sob'd, wept and groan'd, and beat his wither'd breast. Dry.
- WINK. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. Act of closing the eye.
You doing thus,
To the perpetual wink for ay might put
This ancient moral. Shak. Lear's Tempest.
At every wink of an eye some new grace will be born. Shak.
Since I receiv'd command to do this business,
I have not slept one wink. Shak. Cymbeline.
The beams fo reverend and frong,
Do'st thou not think I could sleep with a wink?
I could eclipse and cloud them with a wink,
But that I would not lose her fight so long? Donne.
It rag'd fo all night, that I could not sleep a wink. Temple.
Not write! but then I think;
And for my soul I cannot sleep a wink. Pope.
 2. A hint given by motion of the eye.
Her wink each bold attempt forbids. Sidney.
The stockjobber thus from 'Change-alley goes down,
And tips you the freeman a wink;
Let me have but your vote to serve for the town,
And here is a guinea to drink. Swift.
- WINKER. n. f. [from wink.] One who winks.
A set of nodders, winkers, and whisperers, whose business is to flangle all others offspring of wit in their birth. Pope.

WIN

- WINKINGLY. adv. [from winking.] With the eye, almost closed.
If one beholdeth the light, he vieweth it winkingly, as those do that are purblind; but if any thing that is black, he looketh upon it with a broad and full eye. Peacbam on Drawing.
- WINNER. n. f. [from win.] One who wins.
A gamester, having lost all, borroweth of his next fellow-gamester somewhat to maintain play; which he setting unto him again, shortly thereby winneth all from the winner. Spenser.
- Go together,
You precious winners all; your exultation Partake to every one. Shak. Winter's Tale.
Behrew the winners; for they play'd me false. Shak. Sp.
Whether the winner laughs or no, the loser will complain; and rather than quarrel with his own skill, will do it at the dice. Temple.
- WINNING. participial adj. [from win.] Attractive; charming.
Yet less fair,
Less winning soft, less amiably mild,
Than that smooth wat'ry image. Milton's Paradise Lost.
On her, as queen,
A pomp of winning graces waited still;
And from about her shot darts of desire
Into all eyes, to wither her still in fight. Milt. Parad. Lost.
Caro's soul
Shines out in every thing she acts or speaks,
While winning mildness and attractive smiles
Dwell in her looks, and with becoming grace Softens the rigour of her father's virtues. Addison's Cato.
- WINNING. n. f. [from win.] The sum won.
A simile in one of Congreve's prologues compares a writer to a buttering gamester, that flakes all his winnings upon every cast; fo that if he loses the last throw, he is sure to be undone. Addison's Freeholder.
- To WINNOW. v. a. [pinetran, Saxon; evanno, Latin.]
1. To separate by means of the wind; to part the grain from the chaff.
Were our royal faith martyrs in love,
We shall be winnow'd with fo rough a wind,
That even our corn shall seem as light as chaff,
And good from bad find no partition. Shak. Hen. IV.
In the fun your golden grain display,
And thrash it out and winnow it by day. Dryden's Virgil.
 2. To fan; to beat as with wings.
Now on the polar winds, then with quick fan Winnows the buxom air. Milton's Paradise Lost.

- WINTER. n. f. [pinetran, Saxon; winter, Danish, German, and Dutch.] The cold season of the year.
Though he were already steep'd into the winter of his age, he found himself warm in those desires, which were in his son far more excusable. Sidney.
After Summer evermore succeeds
The barren Winter with his nipping cold. Shak. Hen. VI.
Those flaws and starts
Inapostors brow to fear, would well become A woman's story at a Winter's fire. Shak. Macbeth.
He hath bought a pair of cast lips of Diana: a nun of Winter's sisterhood kisses not more religiously; the very ice of chastity is in them. Shak. As you like it.
The two beneath the distant poles complain
Of endless Winter and perpetual rain.
Liest thou asleep beneath those hills of snow?
Stretch out thy lazy limbs; awake, awake,
And Winter from thy furry mantle shake. Dryden.
Suppose our poet was your foe before,
Yet now, the business of the field is o'er,
'Tis time to let your civil wars alone,
When troops are into Winter-quarters gone. Dryden.
He that makes no reflections on what he reads, only loads his mind with a rhapsody of tales, fit in Winter-nights for the entertainment of others. Locke.
The republick have sent to prince Eugene to desire the emperor's protection, with an offer of Winter-quarters for four thousand Germans. Addison on Italy.
Stern Winter smiles on that auspicious clime,
The fields are florid with unfading prime.
To define Winter, I consider first wherein it agrees with Summer, Spring, Autumn, and I find they are all seasons of the year; therefore a season of the year is a genus: then I observe wherein it differs from these, and that is in the shortness of the days; therefore this may be called its special nature, or difference.

WIP

difference: then, by joining these together, I make a definition. Winter is that season of the year wherein the days are shortest.

WIT

WIT

- Wit* lying most in the assemblage of ideas, and putting those together with quickness and variety, wherein can be found any resemblance, or congruity, thereby to make up pleasant pictures in the fancy. Judgment, on the contrary, lies in separating carefully one from another, ideas, wherein can be found the least difference, thereby to avoid being misled by similitude. Locke.
- Cou'd any but a knowing prudent cause
Begin such motions, and assign such laws?
If the great mind had form'd a different frame,
Might not your wanton wit the system blame? Blackmore.
3. Sentiments produced by quickness of fancy.
All sorts of men take a pleasure to gird at me. The brain of this foolish compounded clay, man, is not able to invent any thing that tends more to laughter, than what I invent, and is invented on me. I am not only witty in myself, but the cause that wit is in other men. Shakespeare.
- His works become the frippery of wit. B. Johnson.
- The Romans made those times the standard of their wit, when they subdu'd the world. Sprat.
- The definition of wit is only this; that it is a propriety of thoughts and words; or, in other terms, thoughts and words elegantly adapted to the subject. Dryden.
- Let a lord once but own the happy lines;
How the wit brightens, and the style refines! Pope.
4. A man of fancy.
Intemperate wits will spare neither friend nor foe; and make themselves the common enemies of mankind. L'Estr.
- A poet, being too witty himself, could draw nothing but wits in a comedy: even his fools were infected with the disease of their author. Dryden.
- To tell them wou'd a hundred tongues require;
Or one vain wit's, that might a hundred tire. Pope.
5. A man of genius.
Searching wits, of more mechanic parts;
Who grac'd their age with new-invented arts:
Those who to worth their bounty did extend,
And those who knew that bounty to commend. Dryden.
- How vain that second life in others breath?
Th' estate which wits inherit after death;
Ease, health, and life, for this they must resign,
Unsure the tenure, but how vast the fine!
The great man's curse, without the gain endure;
Be envy'd, wretched; and be flatter'd, poor. Pope.
6. Sense; judgment.
Strong was their plot,
Their practice close, their faith suspected not;
Their states far off, and they of wary wit. Daniel.
- Come, leave the loathed stage,
And this more loathsome age;
Where pride and impudence in faction knit, Uppur the chair of wit. B. Johnson.
- Though his youthful blood be fir'd with wine,
He wants not wit the danger to decline. Dryden.
7. In the plural. Sound mind; intellect not crazed.
If our wits run the wild-goose chase, I have done: for thou hast more of the wild-goose in one of thy wits, than I have in my whole five. Shakespeare. Romeo and Juliet.
- I had a son,
Now outlaw'd from my blood; he fought my life:
The grief hath craz'd my wits. Shakespeare. K. Lear.
- Are his wits safe? is he not light of brain?
Sound sleep cometh of moderate eating; he riseth early, and his wits are with him: but the pain of watching, and choler, and pangs of the belly, are with an unfatiable man. Ecclesiast. xxxi. 20.
- Wickedness is voluntary frenzy, and every finner does more extravagant things than any man that is crazed, and out of his wits, only that he knows better what he does. Tillotson.
- No man in his wits can seriously think that his own soul hath existed from all eternity. Bentley.
8. Contrivance; stratagem; power of expedients.
How can it chuse but bring the simple to their wits end? how can it chuse but vex and amaze them? Hooker.
- I was like to be apprehended for the witch of Brainford; but that my admirable dexterity of wit, counterfeiting the action of an old woman, delivered me. Shakespeare.
- Sleights from his wit and subtlety proceed. Milton.
- The neighbourhood were at their wits end, to consider what would be the issue. L'Estrange.
- WITCHCRAFT. n. f. [wit and craft.] Contrivance; invention; subdlety.
- He was no body that could not hammer out of his name an invention by this witchcraft, and picture it accordingly. Camden's Remains.
- WITCHCRACKER. n. f. [wit and cracker.] A joker; one who breaks a jest.
- A college of witchcrackers cannot flout me out of my humour; dost thou think I care for a satire or an epigram? Shakespeare.
- WITWORM. n. f. [wit and worm.] One that feeds on wit; a canker of wit.

WIT

- Thus to come forth so suddenly a witworm. B. Johnson.
- WITCH. n. f. [picce, Saxon.]
1. A woman given to unlawful arts.
Wife judges have prescribed, that men may not rashly believe the confessions of witches, nor the evidence against them. For the witches themselves are imaginative; and people are credulous, and ready to impute accidents to witchcraft. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
- The night-hag comes to dance
With Lapland witches, while the lab'ring moon Eclipses at their charms. Milton.
- When I consider whether there are such persons as witches, my mind is divided: I believe in general that there is such a thing as witchcraft, but can give no credit to any particular instance of it. Addison's Spectator, N° 117.
2. [From pic, Saxon.] A winding sinuous bank.
Leave me those hills where harb'rough his to see;
Nor holy bush, nor briar, nor winding witch. Spenser.
- To WITCH. v. a. [from the noun.] To bewitch; to enchant.
'Tis now the very witching time of night,
When churchyards yawn. Shakespeare. Hamlet.
- Me ill befits, that in der-doing arms,
And honour's suit my vowed days do spend,
Unto thy bounteous baits, and pleasing charms,
With which weak men thou witchest to attend. Spenser.
- I'll witch sweet ladies with my words and looks. Shakespeare.
- Sit and witch me? Shakespeare. Hen. VI.
- WITCHCRAFT. n. f. [witch and craft.] The practices of witches.
Urania name, whose force he knew so well,
He quickly knew what witchcraft gave the blow. Sidney.
- If you cannot Bar his access to the king, never attempt
Any thing on him, for he hath a witchcraft
Over the king in's tongue. Shakespeare. Hen. VIII.
- People are credulous, and ready to impute accidents and natural operations to witchcraft. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

Love worketh no ill to his neighbour. Rom. xiii. 10.
Our light affliction for a moment worketh for us a far more eternal weight of glory. 2 Cor. iv. 18.
We might work any effects, not holpen by the co-operation of spirits, but only by the unity of nature. Bacon.
Moisture, although it doth not pass through bodies without communication of some substance, as heat and cold do, yet it worketh effects by qualifying of the heat and cold. Bacon.
Such power, being above all that the understanding of man can conceive, may well work such wonders. Drummond.
God,

WOR

God, only wife, to punish pride of wit,
Among mens wits hath this confusion wrought;
As the proud tow'r, whose points the clouds did hit,
By tongues confusion was to ruin brought.
Of the tree.
Which, tasted, work knowledge of good and evil,
Thou may'st not: in the day thou eat'st, thou dy'st. Milton.

6. To manage.
Mere personal valour could not supply want of knowledge in building and working ships. Arbutnot.

7. To put to labour; to exert.
Now, Marcus, thy virtue's on the proof;
Put forth thy utmost strength, work every nerve,
And call up all thy father in thy foul. Addison's Cato.

8. To embroider with a needle.
Not only every society, but every single person has enough to do to work out his own salvation. Decay of Piety.

9. To WORK out. To effect by toil.
The mind takes the hint from the poet, and works out the rest by the strength of her own faculties. Addison.

10. To WORK out. To erase; to efface.
Tears of joy for your returning spilt,
Work out and expiate our former guilt. Dryden.

11. To WORK up. To raise.
That which is wanting to work up the pity to a greater height, was not afforded me by the story. Dryden.

This lake resembles a sea, when worked up by storms. Addison.

The sun, that rolls his chariot o'er their heads, Works up more fire and colour in their cheeks. Addison's Cato.

We should inure ourselves to such thoughts, 'till they have worked up our souls into filial awe and love of him. Atterbury.

WORK. n. f. [from work, Saxon; werk, Dutch.]
1. Toil; labour; employment.
Bread, correction, and work for a servant. Ecclesiastical, xxxiii.

In the bottom of some mines in Germany there grow vegetables, which the work-folks say have magical virtue. Bacon.

The ground, unbid, gives more than we can ask;
But work is pleasure, when we chuse our talk. Dryden.

2. A state of labour.
All the world is perpetually at work, only that our poor mortal lives should pass the happier for that little time we possess them, or else end the better when we lose them: upon this occasion riches came to be coveted, honours esteemed, friendship pursued, and virtues admired. Temple.

3. Bumbling attempt.
It is pleasant to see what work our adversaries make with this innocent canon: sometimes 'tis a mere forgery of hereticks, and sometimes the bishops that met there were not so wise as they should have been. Stillingfleet.

4. Flowers or embroidery of the needle.
Round her work the did empale,
With a fair border wrought of sundry flowers,
Inwoven with an ivy-winding trail. Spenser.

That handkerchief, you gave me: I must take out the work: a likely piece of work, that you should find it in your chamber, and know not who left it there. This is some minx's token, and I must take out the work? There, give it your hobbyhorse: wherefore you had it, I'll take out no work on't. Shakespeare's Otello.

5. Any fabric or compages of art.
Nor was the work impair'd by storms alone,
But felt th' approaches of too warm a sun. Pope.

6. Action; feat; deed.
The instrumentality of riches to works of charity, have rendered it necessary in every Christian commonwealth by laws to secure propriety. Hammond.

As to the composition or dissolution of mixt bodies, which is the chief work of elements, and requires an intire application of the agents, water hath the principality and excels over earth. Digby.

Nothing lovelier can be found in woman,
Than good works in her husband to promote.
While as the works of bloody Mars employ'd,
The wanton youth inglorious peace enjoy'd. Pope.

7. Any thing made.
Where is that holy fire, which verse is said
To have? Is that enchanting force decay'd?
Verse, that draws nature's works from nature's law,
There, her best work, to her work cannot draw. Donne.

O fairest of creation! last and best
Of all God's works! creature, in whom excels
Whatever can to fight or thought be form'd;
Holy, divine, good, amiable, or sweet,
How art thou lost! Milton's Paradise Lost.

8. Management; treatment.
Let him alone; I'll go another way to work with him. Shakespeare.

9. To set on WORK. To employ; to engage.
It setteth those wits on work in better things, which would be else employed in worse. Hooker.

WORKER. n. f. [from work.] One that works.
Ye fair nymphs, which oftentimes have loved
The cruel worker of your kindly smarts, Prepare yourselves, and open wide your hearts. Spenser.

WOR

His father was a worker in brass. Kings vii. 14.

You spoke me fair; but even then betrayed me: depart from me, you professors of holiness, but workers of iniquity. South's Sermons.

WORKFELLOW. n. f. [from work and fellow.] One engaged in the same work with another. Rom.

Timotheus, my workfellow, and Lucius, salute you. Rom.

WORKHOUSE. n. f. [from work and house.] A place in which any manufacture is carried on.
The quick forge and workinghouse of thought. Shakespeare's H.V.

Protagenes had his workhouse in a garden out of town, where he was daily finishing those pieces he begun. Dryden.

2. A place where idlers and vagabonds are condemned to labour.
Hast thou suffered at any time by vagabonds and pilferers?
Ereem and promote those useful charities which remove such pests into prisons and workhouses. Atterbury.

WORKINGDAY. n. f. [from work and day.] Day on which labour is permitted; not the sabbath.

How full of briars is this workingday world? Shakespeare.

Will you have me, lady?
—No, my lord, unless I might have another for working-days; your grace is too costly to wear every day. Shakespeare.

WORKMAN. n. f. [from work and man.] An artificer; a maker of any thing.
When workmen strive to do better than well,
They do confound their skill in covetousness. Shakespeare.

If prudence works, who is a more cunning workman? Wisd.

There was no other cause preceding than his own will, no other matter than his own power, no other workman than his own word, and no other consideration than his own infinite goodness. Raleigh.

They have inscribed the pedestal, to shew their value for the workman. Addison on Italy.

WORKMANLY. adj. [from workman.] Skillful; well performed; workmanlike.

WORKMANLY. adv. Skillfully; in a manner becoming a workman.
In having but fortie foot workmanly dight,
Take fasson en ough for a lord and a knight. Tusser.

We will fetch thee straight
Daphne roaming through a thorny wood,
Scratching her legs, that one shall swear the bleeds,
And at that sight shall sad Apollo weep,
So workmanly the blood and tears are drawn. Shakespeare.

WORKMANSHIP. n. f. [from workman.]
1. Manufacture; something made by any one.
Nor any skill'd in workmanship embold'd,
Nor any skill'd in loops of fing'ring fine,
Might in their diverse cunning ever dare
With this so curious network to compare. Spenser.

By how much Adam exceeded all men in perfection, by being the immediate workmanship of God, by so much did that chosen garden exceed all parts of the world. Raleigh.

He moulded them to his own idea, delighting in the choice of the materials; and afterwards, as great architects use to do, in the workmanship of his regal hand. Watson.

What more reasonable than to think, that if we be God's workmanship, he shall set this mark of himself upon all reasonable creatures? Tilleyson.

2. The skill of a worker; the degree of skill discovered in any manufacture.
The Tritonian goddess having heard
Her blazed fame, which all the world had fill'd,
Came down to prove the truth, and due reward
For her praise-worthy workmanship to yield. Spenser.

3. The art of working.
If there were no metals, 'tis a mystery to me how Tubal-cain could ever have taught the workmanship and use of them. Woodward's Natural History.

WORKMASTER. n. f. [from work and master.] The performer of any work.
What time this world's great workmaster did cast
To make all things, such as we now behold,
It seems that he before his eyes had plac'd
A goodly pattern, to whose perfect mould
He fashion'd them so comely. Spenser.

Every carpenter and workmaster that laboureth. Ecclesiastical, xxxviii.

Delire, which tends to know
The works of God, thereby to glorify
The great workmaster, leads to no excess. Milton's Paradise Lost.

WORKWOMAN. n. f. [from work and woman.]
1. A woman skilled in needle-work.
The moist fine-fingered workwoman on ground,
Aracine, by his means was vanquished. Spenser.

2. A woman that works for hire.
WORKYDAY. n. f. [Corrupted from workingday.] The day not the sabbath.
Tell her but a workyday fortune. Shakespeare.

The other days, and thou
Make up one man; whose face thou art,
The workdays are the back part;
The burden of the week lies there. Herbert.

Holydays.

WOR

Holydays, if haply they were gone, Gay.

Like workdays, I with would soon be done:
WORLD. n. f. [from world, Saxon; wereld, Dutch.]
1. World is the great collective idea of all bodies whatever. Loc.

2. System of beings.
Begotten before all worlds. Nicene Creed.

God hath in these last days spoken unto us by his son, by whom he made the worlds. Hebr. i. 2.

Know how this world
Of heav'n and earth conspicuous first began. Milton.

3. The earth; the terraqueous globe.
He the world
Built on circumfluous waters. Milton's Paradise Lost.

4. Present state of existence.
I'm in this earthly world, where to do harm
Is often laudable; to do good sometime Accounted dangerous folly. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

I was not come into the world then. L'Estrange.

He wittingly brought evil into the world. More.

Christian fortitude consists in suffering for the love of God, whatever hardships can befall in the world. Dryden.

5. A secular life.
Happy is he that from the world retires,
And carries with her what the world admires.
Thrice happy she, whose young thoughts fixt above,
While she is lovely, does to heav'n make love;
I need not urge your promise, ere you find An entrance here, to leave the world behind? Waller.

By the world, we sometimes understand the things of this world; the variety of pleasures and interests which steal away our affections from God. Sometimes we are to understand the men of the world, with whose solicitations we are so apt to comply. Rogers's Sermons.

6. Publick life.
Hence banished, is banish'd from the world;
And world exil'd is death. Shakespeare's Romeo and Juliet.

7. Business of life; trouble of life.
Here I'll set up my everlasting rest,
And shake the yoke of man's suspicious stars
From this world-wearied flesh. Shakespeare's Romeo and Juliet.

8. Great multitude.
You a world of curses undergo,
Being the agents, or base second means. Shakespeare.

Nor doth this wood lack worlds of company; Shakespeare.

For you in my respect are all the world. Raleigh's Apology.

I leave to speak of a world of other attempts furnished by kings. Shakespeare's Apology.

What a world of contradictions would follow upon the contrary opinion, and what a world of confusions upon the contrary practice. Bp. Sanderfon.

Just to romances are, for what else
Is in them all, but love and battles?
O'th' first of these we have no great matter
To treat of, but a world o'th' latter. Hudibras.

It brought into this world a world of woe. Milton.

There were a world of paintings, and among the rest the picture of a lion. L'Estrange.

Marriage draws a world of business on our hands, subjects us to law-suits, and loads us with domestic cares. Dryden.

From thy corporeal prison freed,
Soon hast thou reach'd the goal with mended pace;
A world of woes dispatch'd in little space. Dryden.

Why will you fight against so sweet a passion,
And feel your heart to such a world of charms? Addison.

9. Mankind; an hyperbolic expression for many.
This hath bred high terms of separation between such and the rest of the world, whereby the one sort are named the brethren, the godly; the other worldlings, time-servers, pleasers of men more than of God. Hooker.

'Tis the duke's pleasure,
Whose disposition, all the world well knows,
Will not be rubb'd nor stopp'd.
Why dost thou shew me thus to th' world? Shakespeare's Measure for Measure.

Bear me to prison.
He was willing to declare to all the world, that, as he had been brought up in that religion established in the church of England, so he could maintain the same by unanswerable reasons. Clarendon.

10. Course of life.
Persons of conscience will be afraid to begin the world unjustly. Clarissa.

11. Universal empire.
Rome was to sway the world. Milton.

This through the east just vengeance hurl'd,
And lost poor Antony the world. Prior.

12. The manners of men.
Children should not know any wickedness. Old folks have discretion, and know the world. Shakespeare.

What start at this! when sixty years have spread
Their grey experience o'er thy hoary head?
Is this the all observing age could gain?
Or hast thou known the world to long in vain? Dryden.

WOR

If knowledge of the world makes man perfidious,
May Juba ever live in ignorance. Addison's Cato.

The girl might pass, if we could get her
To know the world a little better;
To know the world! a modern phrase
For visits, ombre, balls and plays. Swift.

13. A collection of wonders; a wonder. Obsolete.
The baffle having recommended Barbarossa, it was a world to see, how the court was changed upon him. Knolles.

14. Time. A sense originally Saxon; now only used in World without end.

15. In the world. In Possibility.
All the precautions in the world were taken for the marriage of his younger brother. Addison.

16. For all the world. Exactly. A ludicrous sense; now little used.
He had a pair of horns like a bull, his feet cloven, as many eyes upon his body as my grey mare hath dapples, and for all the world to placed. Sidney, b. ii.

WORLTLINESS. n. f. [from worldly.] Covetousness; addiction to gain.

WORLTLING. n. f. [from world.] A mortal set upon profit.
Basteminded wretches! are your thoughts so deeply bemired in the trade of ordinary worldlings, as for respect of gain to let so much time pass. Sidney.

The one sort are nam'd the brethren, the godly; the other worldlings, time-servers, and pleasers of men more than pleasers of God. Hooker.

God of the world and worldlings,
Great Mammon! greatest god below the sky. Fa. Queen.

For his weeping in the needful stream;
Poor deer, quoth he, thou mak'st a testament
As worldlings do, giving thy sum of more
To that which had too much. Shakespeare's As You Like It.

That other on his friends his thoughts bestows:
The covetous worldling, in his anxious mind,
Thinks only on the wealth he left behind. Dryden.

If we consider the expectations of futurity, the worldling gives up the argument. Rogers.

WORLDELY. adj. [from world.]
1. Secular; relating to this life, in contradistinction to the life to come.
He is divinely bent to meditation;
And in no worldly suits would he be moved,
To draw him from his holy exercise. Shakespeare's Rich. III.

Hast thou not worldly pleasure at command? Shakespeare.

Tell me, ye toad-swol'n, flinty Pharaoh's, tell;
Can worldly pleasures equal pains of hell? N. Richards.

The fortitude of a christian consists in patience, not in enterprizes which the poets call heroic, and which are commonly the effects of interest, pride, and worldly honour. Dryden.

Compare the happiness of men and beasts no farther than it results from worldly advantages. Atterbury.

2. Bent upon this world; not attentive to a future state.
They'll practise how to live secure,
Worldly or dissolute, on that their lords Shall leave them to enjoy. Milton's Par. Lost, b. xi.

3. Human; common; belonging to the world.
Many years it hath continued, standing by no other worldly mean, but that one only hand which erected it. Hooker.

Times and places are approved witnesses of worldly actions. Raleigh's Hist. of the World.

WORLDELY. adv. [from world.] With relation to the present life.
It is a token of a worldly wife man, not to contend in vain against the nature of times wherein he liveth. Raleigh.

Subverting worldly strong and worldly wife,
By simply meek. Milton's Par. Lost, b. xii.

'Tis his cannot be done, if my will be worldly, or voluptuously disposed. South's Sermons.

Since your mind is worldly bent,
Therefore of the two gifts in my dispose,
Think ere you speak, I grant you leave to choose. Dryden.

WORM. n. f. [from worm, Saxon; worm, Dutch; vermis, Lat.]
1. A small harmless serpent that lives in the earth.
Both the princes
Thy broken faith hath made a prey to worms. Shakespeare.

Help me into some house,
Or I shall faint;—a plague o' both your houses!
They have made worms meat of me. Shakespeare.

I though worms devour me, though I turn to mold,
Yet in my flesh I shall his face behold:
I from my marble monument shall rise
Again intire, and see him with these eyes. Sandys's Par.

At once came forth whatever creeps the ground,
Infect or worm. Milton.

2. A poisonous serpent.
The mortal worm. Shakespeare.

3. Animal bred in the body.
Physicians observe these worms engendered within the body of man. Harvey on Consumptions.

4. The animal that spins silk.
Thou owest the worm no silk, the sheep no wool. Shakespeare.

30. Y. This is a very old word.

WOR

5. Grubs that gnaw wood and furniture.
 'Tis no awkward claim,
 Pick'd from the worm-holes of long vanish'd days,
 Nor from the dust of old oblivion rak'd. Shakefp. Hen. V.
 6. Something tormenting.
 The worm of conscience still begnaw thy soul. Shakefp.
 The chains of darkness, and th' undying worm. Milton.
 7. Any thing vermiculated, or turned round; any thing spiral.
 The threads of screws, when bigger than can be made in screw-plates, are called worms. The length of a worm begins at the one end of the spindle, and ends at the other; the breadth of the worm is contained between any two grooves on the spindle; the depth of the worm is cut into the diameter of the spindle, viz. the depth between the outside of the worm, and the bottom of the groove. Moxon.
 To WORM. v. n. [from the noun.] To work slowly, secretly, and gradually.
 When debates and fretting jealousy,
 Did worm and work within you more and more,
 Your colour faded. Herbert.
 To WORM. v. a. To drive by flow and secret means.
 They find themselves worm'd out of all power, by a new spawn of independents, sprung from your own bowels. Swift.
 2. To deprive a dog of something, nobody knows what, under his tongue, which is said to prevent him, nobody knows why, from running mad.
 Everyone that keepeth a dog, should have him worm'd. Mort.
 WORMEATEN. adj. [from worm and eat.] Shakefp.
 1. Gnawed by worms.
 For his verity in love, I do think him as concave as a covered goblet, or a wormeaten nut. Shakefp.
 2. Old; worthless.
 His chamber all was hanged about with rolls,
 And old records from ancient times deriv'd;
 Some made in books, some in long parchment scrolls.
 That were all wormeaten, and full of canker holes. Spenser.
 Things among the Greeks, which antiquity had worn out of knowledge, were called ogygia, which we call wormeaten, or of defaced date. Raleigh's Hist. of the World.
 Thine's like wormeaten trunks cloath'd in seal's skin;
 Or grave, that's dust without, and flint within. Donne.
 WORMWOOD. n. f. [from its virtue to kill worms in the body.]
 Wormwood hath an indeterminate stalk, branching out into many small shoots, with spikes of naked flowers hanging downward; the leaves are hoary and bitter. Of this plant there are thirty-two species, one of which, the common wormwood, grows in the roads; but it is also planted in gardens for common use. Great variety of sea wormwoods are found in the salt marshes of England, and sold in the markets for the true Roman wormwood, though they differ greatly. Mill.
 She was wean'd; I had then laid Wormwood to my dug. Shakefp. Romeo and Juliet.
 Ptituitous Cacoehymia must be corrected by bitters, as wormwood wine. Pleyer on the Humours.
 I ask whether one be not invincibly conscious to himself of a different perception, when he actually tastes wormwood, or only thinks on that favour. Locke.
 WORMY. adj. [from worm.] Full of worms.
 Spirits that in crossways and floods have burial,
 Already to their wormy beds are gone. Shakefp.
 Yet can I not persuade me thou art dead,
 Or that thy corse corrupts in earth's dark womb,
 Or that thy beauties lie in wormy bed. Milton.
 WORN, part. pass. of wear.
 His is a maiden shield,
 Guiltless of fight: mine batter'd, hew'd and bor'd,
 Worn out of service, must forsake his lord. Dryden.
 What I now offer, is the wretched remainder of a fickle age, worn out with study, and oppress'd by fortune. Dryden.
 The greatest part of mankind are given up to labour, whose lives are worn out only in the provisions for living. Locke.
 Your cold hypocrisy's a stale device,
 A worn-out trick; would'st thou be thought in earnest, Cloath thy feign'd zeal in rage, in fire, in fury. Addison.
 WORNIL. n. f.
 In the backs of cows in the summer, are maggots generated, which in Effex we call wornils, being first only a small knot in the skin. Derham's Physico-Theology.
 To WORRY. v. a. [from worry, Saxon: whence probably the word warray.]
 1. To tear, or mangle, as a beast tears its prey.
 If we with thrice such powers left at home,
 Cannot defend our own doors from the dogs, let us
 Let us be worried. Shakefp. Hen. V.
 The fury of the tumults might fly so high as to worry and tear those in pieces, whom as yet they but play'd with in their paws. K. Charles.
 'Tis no new thing for the dogs that are to keep the wolves from worrying the sheep, to be deliver'd up to the enemy, for fear the sheep should worry the wolves. L'Estrange.

WOR

This revives and imitates that inhuman barbarity of the old heathen persecutors, wrapping up christians in the flans of wild beasts, that so they might be worried and torn in pieces by dogs. South's Sermons.
 2. To harass, or persecute brutally.
 Then embraces his son-in-law; then again worries he his daughter with clipping her. Shakefp. Winter's Tale.
 For want of words, or lack of breath,
 Witness when I was worried with thy peals. Milton.
 It has pleas'd Providence at length to give us righteousness instead of exaction, and hopes of religion to a church worried with reformation. South's Sermons.
 All his care
 Was to preserve me from the barbarous rage,
 Which worried him only for being mine. South.
 I shall not suffer him to worry any man's reputation, nor indeed fall on any person whatsoever. Addison.
 Let them rail,
 And then worry one another at their pleasure. Rowe.
 Madam, contrive and invent,
 And worry him out, till he gives his consent. Swift.
 WORSE. adj. The comparative of bad: bad, worse, worst.
 [ppr, Saxon.] More bad; more ill.
 Why should he see your faces worse liking than the children of your sort? Daniel.
 Whether this or worse, love not the faithful side. Milton.
 In happiness and misery, the question still remains, how men come often to prefer the worse to the better, and to chuse that, which, by their own confession, has made them miserable. Locke.
 WORSE. adv. In a manner more bad.
 The more one fickers, the worse at ease he is. Shakefp.
 The WORSE. n. f. [from the adjective.]
 1. The loss; not the advantage; not the better.
 Was never man, who most conquests achiev'd,
 But sometimes had the worse, and lost by war. Spenser.
 Judah was put to the worse before Israel; and they fled to their tents. 2 Kings xiv. 12.
 2. Something less good.
 A man, whatever are his professions, always thinks the worse of a woman, who forgives him for making an attempt on her virtue. Clarissa.
 To WORSE. v. a. [from the adjective.] To put to disadvantage. This word, though analogical enough, is not now used.
 Perhaps more valid arms,
 Weapons more violent, when next we meet,
 May serve to better us, and worse our foes. Milton.
 WORSE. adj. A barbarous word, formed by corrupting worse with the usual comparative termination.
 Gods! take my breath from me;
 Let not my worse spirit tempt me again
 To die before you please. Shakefp.
 A dreadful quiet felt, and worse far
 Than arms, a fullen interval of war. Dryden.
 WORSHIP. n. f. [from worship, Saxon.]
 1. Dignity; eminence; excellence.
 Thou madest him lower than the angels, to crown him with glory and worship. Pf. viii. 5.
 Elfin born of noble state,
 And muckle worship in his native land,
 Well could he tourney, and in lists debate. Fairy Queen.
 My train are men of choice, and rarest parts,
 That all particulars of duty know;
 And in the most exact regard support
 The worship of their names. Shakefp.'s King Lear.
 2. A character of honour.
 I belong to worship, and affect
 In honour, honesty. Shakefp.'s Hen. VIII.
 Dinner is on table; my father desires your worship's company. Shakefp. Merry Wives of Windsor.
 The old Romans freedom did bestow,
 Our princes worship with a blow. Hudibras.
 What lands and lordships for their owner know
 My quondam barber, but his worship now. Dryden.
 3. A term of ironical respect.
 Against your worship, when had S-k writ?
 Or P-ge pour'd forth the torrent of his wit? Pope.
 4. Adoration; religious act of reverence.
 They join their vocal worship to the quire
 Of creatures wanting voice. Milton.
 He wav'd a torch aloft, and, madly vain,
 Sought godlike worship from a servile train. Dryden.
 The worship of God is an eminent part of religion, and prayer is a chief part of religious worship: hence religion is described by seeking God. Tillotson.
 There were several inroads into Germany, particularly a voyage of the Egyptians under Ofris to the Danube; from them the Suedi had their worship of Isis. Arbuthnot.
 5. Honour; respect; civil deference.
 The humble guest shall have worship in the presence of those who sit at meat with him. Luke xiv. 10.
 Since

WOR

Since God hath appointed government among men, it is plain that his intention was, that some kind of worship should be given from some to others; for where there is a power to punish and reward, there is a foundation of worship in those who are under that power; which worship lies in expressing a due regard to that power, by a care not to provoke it, and an endeavour to obtain the favour of it, which, among mankind, is called civil worship. Stillingfleet.
 6. Idolatry of lovers.
 'Tis not your inky brows, your black silk hair,
 Your bugle eyeballs, nor your cheek of cream
 That can entame my spirits to your worship. Shakefp.

Wrap'd in amaze the matrons wildly stare. Waller.
WRAPPER. n. f. [from wrap.]
1. One that wraps.
2. That in which any thing is wrapped.
My arms were pressed to my sides, and my legs closed together by so many wrappers, that I looked like an Egyptian mummy. Addison's Spectator.
WRATH. n. f. [from wrath, Saxon; wrede, Danish; wreed, cruel, Dutch.] Anger; fury; rage.
Thou dost the prayers of the righteous feed
Present before the majesty divine,
And his avenging wrath to clemency incline. Fairy Queen.
With one fool's head I came to wrath,
But I go away with two:
Sweet, adieu! I'll keep my oath,
Patiently to bear my wrath. Shak. Merch. of Venice.
I fear, lest there be debates, envyings, wraths, strifes. Cor.
He hop'd not to escape, but thun
The present, fearing guilty what his wrath
Might suddenly inflict. Milton.
WRATHFUL. adj. [from wrath and full.] Angry; furious; raging.
He cry'd, as raging seas are wont to roar,
When wintry storm his wrathful wreck doth threaten.
Fly from wrath:
Sad be the fights, and bitter fruits of war,
And thousand furies wait on wrathful swords. Fa. Queen.

W R E

How now, your wrathful weapons drawn! Shakespeare.

WRATHFULLY. adv. [from wrathful.] Furiously; passionately.
Gentle friends, moid guard all!
Let's kill him boldly, but not wrathfully. Shakespeare.
WRATHLESS. adj. [from wrath.] Free from anger.
Before his feet, so sheep and lions lay,
Fearless and wrathless, while they heard him play. Waller.
To WREAK. v. a. Old preterite and part. pass. of wreke. [from wreken, Saxon; wreken, Dutch; recken, German.]
1. To revenge.
In an ill hour thy foes thee hither sent,
Another's wrongs to wreak upon thy self. Fairy Queen.
Him all that while occasion did provoke
Against Pyrocles, and new matter fram'd
Upon the old, him stirring to be wroke.
Of his late wrongs. Fairy Queen.
Pale death our valiant leader hath oppress'd,
Come wreak his loss, whom bootless ye complain. Fairfax.
2. To execute any violent design. This is the sense in which it is now used.
On me let death wreak all his rage.
He left the dame,
Resolv'd to spare her life, and save her shame,
But that detested object to remove,
To wreak his vengeance, and to cure her love.
Think how you drove him hence, a wand'ring exile,
To distant climes, then think what certain vengeance
His rage may wreak on your unhappy orphan.
Her husband scourg'd away,
To wreak his hunger on the destin'd prey. Pope.
3. It is corruptly written for reck, to heed; to care.
My master is of churlish disposition,
And little wreaks to find the way to heav'n
By doing deeds of hospitality. Shak. As you like it.
WREAK. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. Revenge; vengeance.
Fortune, mine avowed foe,
Her wrathful wreaks themselves do now allay. Fa. Queen.
Join with the Goths, and with revengful war
Take wreak on Rome for this ingratitude,
And vengeance on the traitor Saturnine. Shak. Tit. Andr.
2. Passion; furious fit.
What and if
His sorrows have so overwhelm'd his wits,
Shall we be thus afflicted in his wreaks,
His fits, his frenzy, and his bitterness? Shak. Tit. Andr.
WREACKFUL. adj. [from wreak.] Revengful; angry.
Call the creatures,
Whose naked natures live in all the spite
Of wreakful heaven. Shakespeare.
She in Olympus' top
Must visit Vulcan for new arms, to serve her wreakful son.
Chapman's Iliad.
WREACKLESS. adj. [I know not whether this word be miswritten for wreckless, careless; or comes from wreak, revenge, and means unrevenging.]
So flies the wreakless shepherd from the wolf;
So first the harmless flock doth yield his fleece,
And next his throat unto the butcher's knife. Shak. H. VI.
WREATH. n. f. [from wreath, Saxon.]
1. Any thing curled or twisted.
The wreath of three was made a wreath of five: to these three first titles of the two houses, were added the authorities parliamentary and papal. Bacon's Henry VII.
Clouds began
To darken all the hill, and smoke to roll
In dusky wreaths reluctant flames. Milton's Par. Lost.
He of his tortuous train
Curl'd many a wanton wreath. Milton.
Let altars smok, wreaths of smoke
And richest gums, and spice, and incense roll
Their fragrant wreaths to heav'n. Smith's Phaed. and Hf.
2. A garland; a chaplet.
Now are our brows bound with victorious wreaths,
Our bruised arms hung up for monuments. Shak. R. III.
Dropp'd from his head, a wreath lay on the ground. Reformation.
The boughs of Lotos, form'd into a wreath,
This monument, thy maiden beauty's due,
High on a plane-tree shall be hung to view. Dryden.
When for thy head the garland I prepare,
A second wreath shall bind Aminta's hair;
And when my choicest songs thy worth proclaim,
Alternate wreath shall bless Aminta's name. Prior.
To prince Henry the laurels of his rival are transferred, with the additional wreath of having conquered that rival.

1. To curl; to twist; to convolve.
Longaville
Did never sonnet for her sake compile,
Nor never laid his wreathed arms athwart
His loving bosom, to keep down his heart. Shakespeare.
About his neck
A green and gilded snake had wreath'd itself,
Who, with her head, nimble in threats approach'd
The opening of his mouth; but suddenly,
Seeing Orlando, it unlinked itself,
And with indented glides did slip away. Shak. As you like it.
The beard of an oat is wreathed at the bottom, and one smooth entire straw at the top; they take only the part that is wreath'd, and cut off the other. Bacon.
2. It is here used for to wreath.
Impatient of the wound,
He rolls and wreaths his shining body round;
Then headlong shoots beneath the dashing tide. Gay.
3. To interweave; to entwine one in another.
Two chains of pure gold of wreathen work shalt thou make them, and fasten the wreathen chains to the oaches. Ex. xxviii.
As snakes breed in dunghills not singly, but in knots; so in such base noisome hearts you shall ever see pride and ingratitude indissolubly wreath'd and twisted together. South.
Here, where the labourer's hands have form'd a bow'r
Of wreathing trees, in singing waste an hour. Dryden.
4. To encircle as a garland.
In the flow'r that wreath the sparkling bowl,
Fell adds his, and pois'nous serpents rowl. Prior.
5. To encircle as with a garland.
For thee she feeds her hair,
And with thy winding ivy wreathes her lance. Dryden.
The soldier, from successful camps returning,
With laurel wreath'd, and rich with hostile spoil, Severs the bull to Mars. Prior.
WREATHY. adj. [from wreath.] Spiral; curled; twisted.
That which is preferred at St. Dennis, near Paris, hath wreathy spires, and cochleary turnings about, which agreeth with the description of an unicorn's horn in Ælian. Brown.
WRECK. n. f. [from wreke, Saxon, a miserable person; wreacke, Dutch, a ship broken.]
1. Destruction by being driven on rocks or shallows at sea; destruction by sea.
Fair be ye sure; but hard and obstinate,
As is a rock amidst the raging floods;
Gainst which a ship, of succour desolate,
Doth suffer wreck both of herself and goods. Spenser.
Like those that see their wreck
Ev'n on the rocks of death; and yet they strain,
That death may not them idly find attend
To their uncertain talk, but work to meet their end. Daniel.
Think not that flying fame reports my fate;
I present, I appear, and my own wreck relate. Dryden.
2. Dissolution by violence.
Not only Paradise,
In this commotion, but the starry cope
Had gone to wreck. Milton's Paradise Lost.
3. Ruin; destruction.
Whether he was Combin'd with Norway, or did line the rebel
With hidden help and vantage; or that with both
He labour'd in his country's wreck, I know not. Shakespeare.
4. It is misprinted here for wreck.
He cry'd as raging seas are wont to roar,
When wintry storm his wrathful wreck doth threaten. Spenser.
To WRECK. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To destroy by dashing on rocks or sands.
Have there been any more such tempests, wherein the hath wretchedly been wrecked? Spenser on Ireland.
A pilot's thumb,
If wreck'd as homeward he did come. Shak. Macbeth.
The coral found growing upon wrecked ships and lost anchors, that are daily dragged up out of the sea, demonstrates that coral continues to be formed to this day. Woodward.
2. To ruin.
Weak and envy'd, if they should conspire,
They wreck themselves, and he hath his desire. Daniel.
3. In the following passages it is ignorantly used for wreak, in its different senses of revenge and execute.
Eighty odd years of sorrow have I seen,
And each hour's joy wreck'd with a week of teen. Shakespeare.
I faint! I die! the goddess cry'd:
O cruel, couldst thou find none other
To wreck thy spleen on? Parricide! Prior.
Like Nero, thou hast slain thy mother. Prior.
To WRECK. v. n. To suffer wreck.
With manlier objects we must try
His contancy, with such as have more flow
Of worth, of honour, glory, and popular praise,
Rocks whereon greatest men have often wreck'd. Milton.

WREN. n. f. [from wrenna, Saxon.] A small bird.
The poor wrens are
The most diminutive of birds, will fight, as Shak. Macb.
Her young ones in her nest, against the owl.
All ages have conceived that the wren is the least of birds, yet the discoveries of America have shew'd us one far less,
the hum-bird not much exceeding a beetle. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
To WRENCH. v. a. [from wrenchen, Saxon; wrenchen, Dutch.]
1. To pull by violence; to wrest; to force.
Wrench his sword from him.
Oh form!
How often dost thou with thy case, thy habit,
Wrench awe from fools, and tie the wiser souls.
To thy false seeming! Shak. Measure for Measure.
Give me that mattock and the wrenching woman. Shakespeare.
Caesar's army, wanting something, demanded a million or discharge, though with no intention it should be granted; but thought by that means to wrench him to their other desires. Bacon.
Sing the Parthian, when transfix'd he lies,
Wrenching the Roman jav'lin from his thighs. Dryden.
Achilles wrench'd it out, and sent again
The hostile gift. Dryden.
Struggling to get loose, I broke the strings, and wrenched out the pegs that fastened my arm to the ground. Gull Travels.
2. To sprain; to distort.
O most small fault!
How ugly didst thou in Cordelia show?
Which, like an engine, wrencht my frame of nature
From the fix'd place; drew from my heart all love,
And added to the gall. Shakespeare King Lear.
You wrenched your foot against a stone, and were forced to stay. Swift.
WRENCH. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. A violent pull or twist.
2. A sprain.
Some small part of the foot being injured by a wrench, the whole leg thereby loses its strength. Locke.
3. WRENCHES, in Chaucer, signifies means, sleights, subtilties; which is, I believe, the sense here.
He resolv'd to make his profit of this business of Britain, as a quarrel for war; and that of Naples as a wrench and mean for peace. Bacon's Henry VII.
To WREST. v. a. [from wresten, Saxon.]
1. To twist by violence; to extort by writhing or force.
To wring this sentence, to wrest thereby out of men's hands the knowledge of God's doctrine, is without all reason. Mcham.
To what wretched state reserv'd,
Better end here unborn! Why is life giv'n,
To be thus wrested from us? Milton's Paradise Lost.
Where you charged in person, you were a conqueror: the rebels afterwards recovered strength, and wrested that victory from others that they had lost to you. Dryden.
Our country's cause,
That drew our swords, now wrests 'em from our hand,
And bids us not delight in Roman blood,
Unprofitably shed. Addison's Cato.
O prince, I blush to think what I have said;
But fate has wrested the confession from me. Addison.
2. To distort; to writhe; to force.
So far to extend their speeches, is to wrest them against their meaning. Hooker.
My father's purposes have been mistook,
And some about him have too lavishly Wrested his meaning and authority. Shakespeare Henry IV.
Wrest once the law to your authority;
To do a great right, do a little wrong. Shakespeare.
WREST. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. Distortion; violence.
Whereas it is concluded, out of those so weak premises, that the retaining of divers things in the church of England, which other reformed churches have cast out, must needs argue that we do not well, unless we can shew that they have done ill: what needed this wrest, to draw out from us an accusation of foreign churches? Hooker.
2. It is used in Spenser and Shakespeare for an active or moving power: I suppose, from the force of a wrest acting with his lance in his rest.
Adown he kept it with so puissant wrest,
That back again it did aloft rebound,
And gave against his mother earth a gronelling sound. F. 2.
Antenor is such a wrest in their affairs,
That their negotiations all must slacken,
Wanting his manage. Shakespeare Troilus and Cressida.
WRESTER. n. f. [from wrest.] He who wrests.
To WRESTLE. v. n. [from wrestle.]
1. To contend who shall throw the other down.
You have lost the fight of good wrestling. Shakespeare.

Another, by a fall in wrestling, started the end of the clavicle from the sternon. Wise man's Surgery.
To play or wrestle well, it should be used with those that do it better. Temple.

None in the leap spring with so strong a bound,
Or firmer in the wrestling press the ground. Pope.

2. To struggle; to contend.
I persuaded them, if they lov'd Benedick,
To wish him wrestle with affection,
And never to let Beatrice know of it. Shakespeare.
He knew not how to wrestle with desperate contingencies, and so abhorred to be entangled in such. Clarendon.

WRE'STLER. n. f. [from wrestle.]
1. One who wrestles; one who professes the athletick art.
Was not Charles, the duke's wrestler, here? Shakespeare.
When the young wrestlers at their sport grew warm,
Old Milo wept, to see his naked arm. Denham.
'Tis not from whom, but where we live;
The place does oft those graces give:
Great Julius, on the mountains bred,
A flock perhaps, or herd, had led;
He that the world subdu'd, had been
But the best wrestler on the green. Waller.

2. One who contends in wrestling.
So earnest with thy God, can no new care,
No sense of danger, interrupt thy prayer?
The sacred wrestler, 'till a blessing giv'n,
Quits not his hold, but halting conquers heav'n. Waller.
Two wrestlers help to pull each other down. Dryden.

WRETCH. n. f. [preca, Saxon.]
1. A miserable mortal.
When I loved, I was a wretch. Accidence.
She weeps, and says her Henry is depos'd;
He smiles, and says his Edward is install'd;
That the poor wretch, for grief can speak no more. Shak.
The butcher takes away the calf,
And binds the wretch, and beats it when it strives. Shakespeare.
Illustrious wretch! repine not, nor reply:
View not what heav'n ordains, with reason's eye;
For bright the object is, the distance is too high. Prior.

2. A worthless sorry creature.
Bale-minded wretches, are your thoughts so deeply bemired in the trade of ordinary worldlings, as for respect of gain some paultry wool may yield you, to let so much time pass without knowing perfectly her estate? Sidney.

Has these poor men in question: never saw I Wretches so quake; they kneel, they kiss the earth,
Forwear themselves as often as they speak. Shakespeare.
Title of honour, worth and virtue's right,
Should not be given to a wretch so vile. Daniel's Civil War.
When they are gone, a company of starved hungry wretches shall take their places. L'Estrange.

3. It is used by way of slight, or ironical pity, or contempt.
When soon away the wafers do go;
Poor wretch was never frightened so:
He thought his wings were much too flow,
O'erjoy'd they so were parted. Dryden's Nymphid.
Then, if the spider find him fast beset,
She issues forth, and runs along her loom:
She joys to touch the captive in her net,
And drags the little wretch in triumph home. Dryden.

4. It is sometimes a word of tenderness, as we now say poor thing.
Chastened but thus, and thus his lesson taught,
The happy wretch the put into her breast. Sidney.

WRETCHED. adj. [from wretch.]
1. Miserable; unhappy.
These we should judge to be most miserable, but that a wretcher fort there are, on whom, whereas nature hath be-flowed ripe capacity, their evil disposition seriously goeth about therewith to apprehend God, as being not God. Hooker.
O cruel death! to those you are more kind,
Than to the wretched mortals left behind. Waller.
Why do'st thou drive me
To range all o'er a waste and barren place,
To find a friend? The wretched have no friends. Dryden.

2. Calamitous; afflictive.
When God was served with legal sacrifices, such was the miserable and wretched condition of some mens minds, that the best of every thing they had, being culled out for themselves, if there were in their flocks any poor, starved, or diseased thing not worth the keepings, they thought it good enough for the altar of God. Hooker.

3. Sorry; pitiful; paltry; worthless.
Affected noise is the most wretched thing.
That to contempt can empty scriblers bring. Rowson.
Forgive the many failings of those who, with their wretched art, cannot arrive to those heights that you possess. Dryden.

4. Despicable; hatefully contemptible.
An adventure worthy to be remembered for the unused examples therein, as well of true natural goodness as of wretched ungratefulness. Sidney.

WRE'TCHEDLY. adv. [from wretched.]
1. Miserably; unhappily.
From these two wars, so wretchedly entered into, the duke's ruin took its date. Clarendon.

2. Meanly; despicably.
When such little shuffling arts come once to be ripped up, and laid open, how poorly and wretchedly must that man sneak,
who finds himself guilty and baffled too? Soub.

WRE'TCHEDNESS. n. f. [from wretched.]
1. Misery; unhappiness; afflicted state.
My misery cannot be greater than it is: fear not the danger of my blind steps, I cannot fall worse than I am, and do not obstinately continue to infect thee with my wretchedness. Sidney.
He 'gan inquire
What hard mishap him brought to such distress,
And made that caitiff's thrall the thrall of wretchedness. F. & C.
Clarion did at last decline
To lowest wretchedness; and is there then Such rancor in the hearts of mighty men?
When they are weary of wars, and brought down to extreme wretchedness, then they creep a little, and sue for grace,
'till they have recovered their strength again. Spenser.
I love not to see wretchedness o'ercharg'd,
And duty in his service perishing. Shakespeare.
We have with the feeling lost the very memory of such wretchedness as our forefathers endured by those wars, of all others the most cruel. Raleigh.

2. Pitifulness; despicableness.
WRE'TCHLESS. n. f. [This is, by I know not whose corruption, written for reckless.] Careless; mindless; heedless.
For any man to put off his present repentance, on contemplation of a possibility that his latter repentance may serve the turn, is the most wretchless presumption, and hath no promise of mercy annexed to it. Hammond.
If persons of so circumspect a piety have been thus overtaken, what security can there be for our wretchless oisiance?
Government of the Tongue.

To WRIGGLE. v. n. [wrgan, Saxon; wiggelen, Dutch.] To move to and fro with short motions.
If sheep or thy lamb fall a wriggling with tail,
Go by and by search it, whilst help may prevail. Tusser.
The busy importunities of these extentional phantoms I look upon as contemptuously, as upon the quick wrigglings up and down of pismires. More.

The excellency of fawing is to keep keff exactly in the line marked to be fawn, without wriggling on either side.
Moxon's Mech. Exer.

To bed went the bridegroom and the bride:
Was never such an ill-pair'd couple ty'd;
Reffless he to's'd, and tumbled to and fro,
And roll'd and wriggled farther off for woe. Dryden.
How wildly will ambition steer!
A vermin wriggling in th' usurper's ear. Dryden.
And both he and his successors would often wriggle in their seats as long as the cushion lasted. Swift.

To WRIGGLE. v. a. To put in a quick reciprocating motion;
to introduce by shifting motion.
Ralpho was mounted now, and gotten O'erthwart his beast with active vaulting,
Wriggling his body to recover
His seat, and cast his right leg over.
A slim thin-gutted fox made a hard shift to wriggle his body into a hen-roost. L'Estrange.

WRIGGLETAIL. n. f. For wrigglingtail. See WRIGGLE.
My ragged ronts all shiver and shake;
They went in the wind, wagg their wriggletails,
Peack as a peacoke, but nought it avails. Spenser.

WRIGHT. n. f. [wrihta, wrihta, Saxon.] A workman; an artificer; a maker; a manufacturer.
It is impossible duly to consider these things, without being rapt into admiration of the infinite wisdom of the Divine Architect, and contemplating the arrogant pretences of the world and animal wrights, and much more the productions of chance. Chapman.

The verb To write has the same found with wright, a workman, right or equity, and rite or ceremony; but spelled very differently. Watts's Logic.

To WRING. v. a. preter. and part. pass. wringed and wrung.

Too soon discover'd his ambitious thought;
Believ'd me his, before I spoke him fair,
And pitch'd his head into the ready snare. Dryden.
9. Manufactured.
It had been no less a breach of peace to have wrought any mine of his, than it is now a breach of peace, to take a town of his in Guiana, and burn it. Raleigh.
Celestial panoply, divinely wrought. Milton.
10. Formed.
He that hath wrought us for the same thing, is God. 2 Cor.
11. Excited by degrees.
The two friends had wrought themselves to such an habitual tenderness for the children under their direction, that each of them had the real passion of a father. Addison.
Advantage was taken of the sanguine temper which so many successes had wrought the nation up to. Swift.
12. Guided; managed.
A ship by skilful steersman wrought. Milton.
13. Agitated; disturbed.
We stay upon your leisure.—
—Give me your favour: my dull brain was wrought With things forgot. Shakespeare. Macbeth.
- WRUNG. The pret. and part. passive of wring.
No mortal was ever so much at ease, but his shoe wrung him somewhere. L'Estrange.
Mix'd with the tender arguifh nature shoots
Through the wrung bosom of the dying man. Thomson.
- WRY. adj. [from writhe.]
1. Crooked; deviating from the right direction.
Sometimes to her news of myself to tell
I go about, but then is all my best
Wry words, and stammering, or else doltish dumb;
Say then, can this but of enchantment come? Sidney.
Cutting the wry neck is never to be practised, but when the disorder is a contraction of the masticoides muscle. Sharp.
2. Distorted.
It is but a kick with thy heels, and a wry mouth, and Sir
Roger will be with thee. Arbutnot.
Instructive work! whose wry-mouth'd portraiture
Display'd the fates her confessors endure. Pope.
3. Wrung; perverted; wrested.
He mangles and puts a wry sense upon protestant writers. Att.
- TO WRY. v. n. [from the adjective.] To be contorted and writhe'd; to deviate from the right direction.
These wry too much on the right hand, ascribing to the holy scripture such kind of perfection as it cannot have. Sand.
- TO WRY. v. a. [from the adjective.] To make to deviate;
to distort.
To what pass are our minds brought, that from the right line of virtue are wry'd to these crooked shifts? Sidney.

X

Is a letter, which, though found in Saxon words, begins no word in the English language.

X.

Y.

Y.

Y A W

Y, At the beginning of words, is a consonant; at the end, and when it follows a consonant, is a vowel, and has the sound of i. It is used at the end of words, and whenever two i's would come together; and in words derived from the Greek, to express the v. Y was much used by the Saxons, whence y is found for i in the old English writers.

YACHT. n. f. A small ship for carrying passengers.

YARD. n. f. [zeap, Saxon.]

1. Inclosed ground adjoining to an house.
One of the lions leaped down into a neighbour's yard, where, nothing regarding the crowing of the cocks, he eat them up.
Brown's Vulgar Errors.
Xanthus one day sent Æsop into the yard, and bade him look well about him.
E'strange.

His wanton kids with budding horns prepar'd,
Fight harmless battles in his homely yard.
Dryden.

2. [zeap, Saxon.] A measure of three feet.

A peer, a counsellor, and a judge, are not to be measured by the common yard, but by the pole of special grace. Bacon.

The arms, spread cross in a straight line, and measured from one end of the long finger on one hand, to that of the other; made a measure equal to the stature, and is named a fathom. Half of that, viz. from the end of the long finger of either arm, so spread, to the middle of the breast is, with us, called a yard.
Holder on Time.

An aqueduct of a Gothic structure, that conveys water from mount St. Francis to Spoleto, from the foundation of the lowest arch to the top, is two hundred and thirty yards. Add.

3. The supports of the sails.

A breeze from shore began to blow;
The sailors ship their oars, and cease to row;
Then hoist their yards a-trip, and all their sails
Let fall to court the wind.
Dryden.

YARDWAND. n. f. [yard and wand.] A measure of a different degrees of dimensions. What affinity has thinking with such attributes? no more than there is between a syllogism and a yardwand.

Cotter.

YARE. adj. [zeap, Saxon.] Ready; dextrous; eager.

Yare, yare, good Iros, quick;—methinks I hear Antony call. Shakep. Ant. and Cleopatra.

I do desire to learn, Sir; and I hope, if you have occasion to use me for your turn, you shall find me yare. Shakepeare.

YARELY. adv. [from yare.] Dextrously; skilfully.

The filken tackles,
Swell with the touches of those flower-soft hands
That yarely frame the office. Shakep. Ant. and Cleop.

YARN. n. f. [zeap, Saxon.] Spun wool; woollen thread.

You would be another Penelope; yet they say, all the yarn the spun in Ulysses's absence, did but fill Ithaca full of moths.
Shakep. Coriolanus.

The web of our life is of a mingled yarn, good and ill together; our virtues would be proud, if our faults whipt them not; and our crimes would despair, if they were not cherish'd by our virtues.
Shakepeare.

Yarn is a commodity very proper to this country, which of all others ought to be most encouraged.
Temple.

It may be useful for the reeling of yarn. Wilkins.

The fates but only spin the coarser clue,
The finest of the wool is left for you.
Spare me but one small portion of the twine,
And let the fifters cut below your line:
The rest among the rubbist may they sweep,
Or add it to the yarn of some old miser's heap.
Dryden.

TO YARR. v. n. [from the sound, harrir, Lat.] To growl, or snarl like a dog.

YARROW. n. f. A plant which grows wild on the dry banks, and is used in medicine.

YAWL. n. f. A little vessel belonging to a ship, for convenience of passing to and from it.

Y E A

TO YAWN. v. n. [zeon, Saxon.]

1. To gape; to oscitate; to have the mouth opened involuntarily by fumes, as in sleepiness.

The sad-eyed justice, with his surly hum,
Delivering o'er to executors pale
The lazy, yawning drone. Shakep. Hen. V.

In yawning, the inner parchment of the ear is extended.

When a man yawneth, he cannot hear so well. Bacon.

At length shook off himself, and ask'd the dame;
And asking yawn'd, for what intent she came? Dryden.

To whom the yawning pilot fast asleep,
Me didst thou bid, to trust the treacherous deep? Dryden.

2. To open wide.

The gaffes,
That bloodily did yawn upon his face. Shakepeare.

'Tis now the very witching time of night,
When churchyards yawn.

Now will I dam up this thy yawning mouth,
For swallowing up the treasure of the realm. Shakep.

He shall cast up the wealth by him devour'd,
Like vomit, from his yawning entrails pour'd. Sandy.

Hell at last
Yawning receiv'd them whole, and on them clos'd. Milton.

The sword pierc'd his tender sides;
Down fell the beauteous youth; the yawning wound
Gush'd out a purple stream. Dryden.

High she rear'd her arm, and with her sceptre struck
The yawning cliff: from its disparted height Adown the mount the gushing torrent ran. Prior.

3. To express desire by yawning.

The chiefest thing at which lay-reformers yawn, is, that the clergy may, through conformity in condition, be poorer as the apostles were. In which one circumstance, if they imagine to great perfection, they must think that church which hath such store of mendicant friars, a church in that respect most happy. Hosier.

YAWN. n. f. [from the verb.] Oscitation.

Thee, Paridel, the mark'd thee, there
Stretch'd on the rack of a too easy chair;
And heard thy everlasting yawn confess
The pains and penalties of idleness. Pope's Dunciad.

2. Gape; hiatus.

Hence to the borders of the marsh they go,
That mingles with the baleful streams below;
And sometimes with a mighty yawn, 'tis said,
Opens a dismal passage to the dead,
Who, pale with fear, the rending earth survey,
And startle at the sudden flash of day. Addison.

YAWNING. adj. [from yawn.] Sleepy; slumbering.

Ere to black Hecate's summons
The shard-born beetle, with his drowsy hums,
Hath rung night's yawning peal, there shall be done
A deed of dreadful note. Shakep. Macbeth.

Y'CLAD. part. for clad. Cloathed.

Her sight did ravish, but her grace in speech,
Her words yelad with wisdom's majesty,
Make me from wond'ring fall to weeping joys. Shakep.

Y'CLEPED. [The participle passive of clepe, to call; clepan, Saxon; with the increasing particle y, which was used in the old English in the preterites and participles, from the Saxon ge.] Called; termed; named.

But come, thou goddess, fair and free,
In heav'n yelap'd Euphrosine,
And by men, heart-easing mirth. Milton.

YDRA'D. The old pret. of to dread. Spenser.

YE. The nominative plural of thou. Spenser.

Ye are they which justify yourselves. Luke xvi. 15.

YEA. adv. [ea, or gea, Saxon; ja, Danish, German, and Dutch.] Yes. A particle of affirmation.

I am weary; yea, my memory is tir'd. Shakepeare.

A rascally, yea, forsooth, knave, to bear a gentleman in hand, and then stand upon security. Shakepeare.

Y E A

From these Philippinae are brought costly spices, yea, and gold too? Abb't's Description of the World.

Yea, hath God said, ye shall not eat of every tree in the garden. Gen. iii. 1.

Let your conversation be yea, yea; nay, nay. Matth. v.

All the promises of God are yea, and amen; that is, are verified, which is the importance of yea, and confirmed, which is meant by amen, into an immutability. Hammond.

They durst abide Jehovah thund'ring out of Sion, thron'd
Between the cherubim; yea, often plac'd
Within his sanctuary itself their shrines. Milton.

Why do disputes in wrangling spend the day?
Whilst one says only yea, and t'other nay. Denham.

Notwithstanding this great proximity of man to himself; yea, and notwithstanding the observations made in all ages, we still remain ignorant of many things concerning ourselves. Hale.

TO YEAD, or YEDE. v. n. preterite yode. [This word seems to have been corruptly formed from geob, the Saxon preterite of gan.] To go; to march. Obsolete.

They wander at will, and stay at pleasure,
And to their folds yead at their own leisure. Spenser.

Then had the knight this lady yede aloof,
And to an hill herself withdraw afide,
From whence the might behold that battle's proof,
And she be safe from danger far deserv'd. Fairy Queen.

Yet for the yode therat half aghast,
And Kiddy the door sparred after her fast. Spenser.

That same mighty man of God,
That bloud red billows like a wall'd front,
On either side disparted with his rod,
'Till that his army dry-foot through them yed. Spenser.

TO YEARN. v. n. [canian, Saxon.] To bring young Used of sheep.

The skilful shepherd pecl'd me certain wands;
He struck them up before the fulsome ewes,
Who, then conceiving, did in yearning time
Fole party-colour'd lambs. Shakepeare.

So many days my ewes have been with young;
So many weeks, ere the poor fools will yearn. Shakepeare.

This I scarcely drag along,
Who yearning on the rocks has leit her young. Dryden.

Ewes year the polled lamb with the least danger. Mortimer.

YEANLING. n. f. [from yearn.] The young of sheep.

All the yearlings which were streak'd and pied,
Should fall as Jacob's hire. Shakepeare.

YEAR. n. f. [geap, Saxon.]

If one by the word year mean twelve months of thirty days each, i. e. three hundred and sixty days; another intend a solar year of three hundred sixty-five days; and a third mean a lunar year, or twelve lunar months, i. e. three hundred fifty-four days, there will be a great variation and error in their account of things, unless they are well apprized of each other's meaning. Watts's Logick.

See the minutes, how they run:
How many makes the hour full compleat,
How many hours bring about the day,
How many days will finish up the year,
How many years a mortal man may live. Shakepeare.

With the year
Seasons return, but not to me returns
Day, or the sweet approach of morn. Milton.

Oviparous creatures have eggs enough at first conceived in them, to serve them for many years laying, allowing such a proportion for every year, as will serve for one or two incubations. Roy on the Creation.

He accepted a curacy of thirty pounds a year. Swift.

2. It is often used plurally, without a plural termination.

I fight not once in forty year. Shakepeare.

3. In the plural of age.

Some mumble-news,
That smiles his cheek in years, and knows the trick
To make my lady laugh when she's dispos'd, Told our intents. Shakep. Love's Labour Lost.

There died also Cecile, mother to King Edward IV. being of extreme years, and who had lived to see three princes of her body crown'd, and four murder'd. Bacon's Hen. VII.

He look'd in years, yet in his years were teen,
A youthful vigour, and autumnal green. Dryden.

YE'ARLING. adj. [from year.] Being a year old.

A yearling bullock to thy name shall smoke;
Untam'd, unconscious of the galling yoke. Pope.

YE'ARLY. adj. [from year.] Annual; happening every year; lasting a year.

The yearly course that brings this day about,
Shall never see it but a holiday. Shakep. K. John.

Why the changing oak should shed
The yearly honour of his stately head;
Whilst the distinguishing yew is ever teen,
Unchang'd his branch, and permanent his green. Prior.

YE'ARLY. adv. Annually; once a year.

He that outlives this days, and sees old age,

Will yearly on the vigil feast his neighbours,
And say, tomorrow is Saint Crispian. Shakep. Hen. V.

For numerous blessings yearly shower'd,
And property with plenty crown'd;
For freedom still maintain'd alive;
For these, and more, accept our pious praise. Dryden.

TO YEARN. v. n. [canian, Saxon.] To feel great internal uneasiness. In Spenser it is sometimes earn.

He despis'd to tread in due degree,
But chaff'd, and foam'd, with courage fierce and stern,
And to be eas'd of that base burden still did yearn. Spenser.

Make the libbard stern
Leave roaring, when in rage he for revenge did yearn. Spens.

Though peeping close into the thick,
Might see the moving of some quick;
But were it fairy, fiend, or snake,
My courage earned it to wake,
And manfully therat shot. Spenser.

Fall'th, he is dead,
And we must yearn therefore. Shakepeare's Hen. V.

Joseph made haste; for his bowels did yearn upon his brother: and he fought where to weep, and he enter'd into his chamber. Gen. xlii. 30.

When the fair Leucothoe he spy'd,
To check his floods, impatient Phœbus yearn'd,
Though all the world was in his course concern'd. Waller.

Yet for all the yearning pain
Y' have suffer'd for their loves, in vain,
I fear they'll prove so nice and coy.
To have, and t' hold, and to enjoy. Hudibras.

Where our heart does but relent, his melts; where our eye pities, his bowels yearn. South's Sermons.

At beholding the miseries of others, they find such yearnings in their bowels, and such sensible commotions raised in their breasts, as they can by no means satisfy. Catany.

Your mother's heart yearns towards you. Addison.

Unmov'd the mind of Ithacus remain'd;
But Anticles, unable to controul,
Spoke loud the language of his yearning soul. Pope.

TO YEARN. v. a. To grieve; to vex.

She laments for it, that it would Yern your heart to see it. Shakepeare.

YEST. n. f. [gep, Saxon.]

1. The foam, spume, or flower of beer in fermentation; barm.

Yeast and outward means do fail,
And have no power to work on ale. Hudibras.

When drays bound high, they never cross behind,
Where bubbling yeast is blown by gulls of wind. Gay.

2. The spume on a troubled sea.

Now the ship being the moon with her main-mast, and anon swallow'd with yeast and froth, as you'd thrust a cork into a hoghead. Shakep. Winter's Tale.

YE'STY. adj. [from yeast.] Frothy; spumy.

Though you untie the winds, and let them fight Against the churches; though the yeast waves Confound and swallow navigation up. Shakep. Macbeth.

YELK. n. f. [from zealepe, yellow, Saxon.] The yellow part of the egg. It is commonly pronounced, and often written yolk.

The yolk of the egg conduceth little to the generation of the bird, but only to the nourishment of the same: for if a chicken be opened, when it is new hatched, you shall find much of the yolk remaining. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

That a chicken is formed out of the yolk of an egg, with some antient philosophers the people still opinion. Brown.

All the feather'd kind,
From th' included yolk, not ambient white arose. Dryden.

TO YELL. v. n. To cry out with horreur and agony.

Nor the night raven, that still deadly yells;
Nor grisly vultures make us once affear'd. Spenser.

Each new morn,
New widows howl, new orphans cry; new sorrows
Strike heav'n on the face, that it refoinds,
As if it felt with Scotland, and yell'd out Like syllables of dolour. Shakep. Macbeth.

Now worse than e'er he was before,
Poor Puck doth yell, poor Puck doth roar,
That wak'd queen Mab, who doubted fore
Some treason had been wrought her. Drayton's Nymphiad.

Yelling monsters, that with ceaseless cry Surround me. Milton.

Night-struck fancy dreams the yelling ghost. Thomson.

YELL. n. f. [from the verb.] A cry of horreur.

With like tim'rous accent and dire yell,
As when, by night and negligence, the fire
Is spread in populous cities. Shakepeare's Othello.

Hence are heard the groans of ghosts, the pains
Of founding lasses, and of dragging chains.
The Trojan stood astonish'd at their cries,
And ask'd his guide from whence those yells arise. Dryden.

YEO

Others in frantick mood
Run howling through the streets; their hideous yells Rend the dark welkin. Philips.
YELLOW. adj. [yealepe, Saxon; gheleue, Dutch; giallo, Italian.] Being of a bright glaring colour, as gold.
Only they that come to see a fellow
In a long motley coat, guarded with yellow,
Will be deceiv'd. Shaksp. Henry VIII. Prologue.
He brought the green car and the yellow sheaf. Milton.
After a lively orange, followed an intense bright and copious yellow, which was also the best of all the yellows. Newton.
Negligent of food,
Scarce seen, he wades among the yellow broom. Thomson.
YELLOWBOY. n. f. A gold coin. A very low word.
John did not starve the cause; there wanted not yellowboys to see council. Arbutnot's John Bull.
YELLOWHAMMER. n. f. A bird.
YELLOWISH. adj. [from yellow.] Approaching to yellow.
Although amber be commonly of a yellowish colour, yet there is found of it also black, white, brown, green, blue, and purple. Woodward's Natural History.
YELLOWISHNESS. n. f. [from yellowish.] The quality of approaching to yellow.
Bruised madder, being drenched with the like alkalize solution, exchanged its yellowishness for a redness. Boyle.
YELLOWNESS. n. f. [from yellow.]
1. The quality of being yellow.
Apples, covered in lime and aches, were well matured, as appeared in the yellowness and sweetness. Bacon's Natural Hist.
Yellowness of the skin and eyes, and a saffron-coloured urine, are signs of an inflammatory disposition of the liver. Arbutnot.
2. It is used in Shakespeare for jealousy.
Ford I will possess with yellowness. Shakespeare.
YELLOWS. n. f. A disease in horses. It owes its original to obstructions in the gall-pipe, which are caused by slimy or gritty matter; or to the stoppage of the roots of those little ducts opening into that pipe, by the like matter; or to a compression of them by a fulness and plenitude of the blood-vessels that lie near them. When the gall-pipe, or the roots rather of the common ducts of that pipe, are any wise stopped up, that matter which should be turned into gall is taken up by the vein, and carried back again into the mass of blood, and tinctures it yellow; so that the eyes, inside of the lips, flaver, and all the parts of the horse, that are capable of shewing the colour, appear yellow.
His horse sped with spavins, and rai'd with the yellows. Farrier's Dict.
TO YELP. v. n. [gealpan, Saxon.] To bark as a beagle-hound after his prey.
A little herd of England's timorous deer,
Maz'd with a yelping kennel of French curs. Shak. H. VI.
YEOMAN. n. f. [Of this word the original is much doubted; the true etymology seems to be that of Junius, who derives it from geman, Frick, a villager.]
1. A man of a small estate in land; a farmer; a gentleman farmer.
Gentlemen should use their children as the honest farmers and substantial yeomen do theirs. Locke.
He that has a spaniel by his side is a yeoman of about one hundred pounds a year, an honest man: he is just qualified to kill an hare. Addison.
2. It seems to have been anciently a kind of ceremonious title given to soldiers: whence we have still yeomen of the guard.
Tall yeomen seem'd they, and of great might,
And were enraged ready still for fight. Fairy Queen.
You, good yeomen,
Whose limbs were made in England, flew us here
The mettle of your pasture. Shaksp. Henry V.
He instituted, for the security of his person, a band of fifty archers, under a captain, to attend him, by the name of yeomen of his guard.
Th' appointment for th' ensuing night he heard;
And therefore in the cavern had prepar'd. Dryden.
At Windsor St. John whispers me i' th' ear;
Two brawny yeomen of his trusty guard. Dryden.
The waiters stand in ranks, the yeomen cry
Make way for the dean, as if a duke pass'd by. Swift.
3. It was probably a freeholder not advanced to the rank of a gentleman.
His grandfather was Lionel duke of Clarence,
Third son to the third Edward king of England:
Spring crestless yeomen from so deep a root? Shak. H. VI.
4. It seems to have had likewise the notion of a gentleman servant.
A jolly yeoman, marshal of the hall,
Whose name was appetite, he did bestow
Both guests and meats. Spenser.
YEOMANRY. n. f. [from yeoman.] The collective body of yeomen.
This did amortize a great part of the lands of the kingdom unto the hold and occupation of the yeomanry, or middle people, of a condition between gentlemen and cottagers. Bacon.

YET

TO YERK. v. a. [Of unknown etymology.] To throw out or move with a spring.
A leaping horse is said to yerk, or strike out his hind legs, when he flings and kicks with his whole hind quarters, stretching out the two hinder legs near together, and even, to their full extent. Farrier's Dict.
Their wounded steeds
Fret fetlock deep in gore, and with wild rage
Yerk out their armed heels at their dead masters. Shaksp.
YERK. n. f. [from the verb.] A quick motion.
TO YERN. v. a. See YEARN.
I am not covetous of gold;
It yerns me not, if men my garments wear. Shak. H. V.
YES. adv. [gyre, Saxon.] A term of affirmation; the affirmative particle opposed to no.
This were a fit speech for a general in the head of an army, when going to battle: yes, and it is no less fit speech in the head of a council, upon a deliberation of entrance into a war. Bacon.
Yes, you despise the man to books confin'd,
Who from his study rails at human kind,
Though what he learns he speaks. Pope.
YE'STER. adj. [ghister, Dutch; hesternus, Latin.] Being next before the present day. It is not often used but in composition with another word, as day or night.
Love might as well be fow'd upon our sands,
As in a breast so barren:
To love an enemy, the only one Remaining too, whom yester fun beheld Must ring her charms. Dryden's Don Sebastian.
YE'STERDAY. n. f. [gytanbæg, Saxon.] The day last past; the day next before to-day.
To-morrow, and to-morrow, and to-morrow,
Creeps in this petty pace from day to day,
To the last syllable of recorded time;
And all our yesterdays have lighted fools
The way to dusty death. Shaksp. Macbeth.
We are but of yesterday, and know nothing, because our days upon earth are a shadow.
You are both fluid, chang'd since yesterday;
Next day repairs but ill last day's decay;
Nor are, although the river keep the name,
Yesterday's waters and to-day's the same. Donne.
If yesterday could be recall'd again,
E'en now would I conclude my happy reign. Dryden.
Yesterday was set apart as a day of publick thanksgiving for the late extraordinary successes.
Mrs. Simper sends complaint in your yesterday's Spectator. Addison's Spectator.
Naked from the womb
We yesterday came forth; and in the tomb
Naked again we must to-morrow lie:
Born to lament, to labour, and to die. Prior.
YE'STERDAY. adv. On the day last past.
Marius gave us yesterday a representation of the empire of the Turks, with no small vigour of words. Bacon.
YE'STERNIGHT. n. f. The night before this night.
YE'STERNIGHT. adv. On the night last past.
Eleven hours I've spent to write it over;
For yesternight by Cateby was it sent me. Shaksp. R. III.
The distribution of this conference was made by Eupolis yesternight. Bacon.
YET. conjunct. [gyt, yet, zeta, Saxon.] Nevertheless; notwithstanding; however.
They had a king was more than him before;
But yet a king, where they were nought the more. Daniel.
Though such men have lived never so much upon the reserve; yet if they be observed to have a particular fondness for persons noted for any sin, it is ten to one but there was a communication in the sin, before there was so in affection. South.
The heathens would never suffer their gods to be reviled, which yet were no gods; and shall it be allowed to any man to make a mock of him that made heaven and earth? Tillot.
He is somewhat arrogant at his first entrance, and is too inquisitive through the whole tragedy; yet these imperfections being balanced by great virtues, they hinder not our compassion for his miseries. Dryden's Dufresnoy.
Let virtuosos in five years be writ,
Yet not one thought accuse thy toil of wit. Dryden.
YET. adv.
1. Beside; over and above.
This furnishes us with yet one more reason, why our Saviour lays such a particular stress on acts of mercy. Atterbury.
2. Still; the state still remaining the same.
They attest facts they had heard while they were yet heathens; and had they not found reason to believe them, they would still have continued heathens, and made no mention of them in their writings. Addison.
3. Once again.
Yet, yet a moment, one dim ray of light,
Indulges dread chaos and eternal night. Pope's Dunciad.

YIE

At this time; so soon; hitherto: with a negative before it.
Thales being asked when a man should marry, said, young men not yet; old men, not at all. Bacon.
5. At least; at all. Noting uncertainty or indetermination.
A man that would form a comparison betwixt Quintilian's declamations, if yet they be Quintilian's, and the orations of Tully, would be in danger of forfeiting his discretion. Baker.
6. It notes increase or extension of the sense of the words to which it is joined.
Shake not his hour-glass, when his hasty sand
Is ebbing to the last:
A little longer, yet a little longer,
And nature drops him down without your sin,
Like mellow fruit without a winter storm. Dryden.
Yet a few days, and those which now appear
In youth and beauty like the blooming year,
In life's swift scene shall change. Dryden.
7. Still; in a new degree.
He that takes from a thief, that which the thief took from an honest man, and keeps it to himself, is the wicked thief of the two, by how much the rapine is made yet blacker by the pretence of piety and justice. L'Estrange.
8. Even; after all. A kind of emphatical addition to a negative.
If any man neglect his duty, his fault must not be ascribed to the rule appointed, neither yet to the whole church. Whitg.
Men may not too rashly believe the confessions of witches, nor yet the evidence against them; for the witches themselves are imaginative, and people are credulous, and ready to impute accidents and natural operations to witchcraft. Bacon.
Nor yet amidst this joy and brightest morn
Was absent, after all his mischief done,
The prince of darkness. Milton's Paradise Regain'd.
9. Hitherto.
Hope beginning here, with a trembling expectation of things far removed, and as yet but only heard of, endeth with real and actual fruition of that which no tongue can express. Hook.
YIVEN. for given.
Wants not a fourth grace to make the dance even?
Let that room to my lady be yeven;
She shall be a grace,
To fill the fourth place,
And reign with the rest in heaven. Spenser.
YEW. n. f. [y, Saxon; yew, Welsh.] This is often written yew; but the former orthography is at once nearer to the sound and the derivation. See EUGH. A tree of tough wood.
It hath amentaceous flowers, which consist of many apices, for the most part shaped like a mushroom, and are barren; but the embryos, which are produced at remote distances on the same tree, do afterward become hollow bell-shaped berries, which are full of juice, and include seeds somewhat like acorns, having, as it were, a little cup to each. Miller.
The shooter yew, the broad-leav'd yew,
The barren plantane, and the walnut found;
The myrrhe, that her foul fin doth still deplore,
Alder the owner of all waterish ground. Fairfax.
Slips of yew,
Shiver'd in the moon's eclipse. Shaksp. Macbeth.
They would bind me here
Unto the body of a dismal yew. Shaksp. Titus Andronicus.
He drew,
And almost join'd the horns of the tough yew. Dryden.
The distinguish'd yew is ever seen,
Unchang'd his branch, and permanent his green. Prior.
YEWEN. adj. [from yew.] Made of the wood of yew.
His stiff arms to stretch with yewen bow.
And many legs still passing to and fro. Hubbard's Tale.

Philodea would needs have her glove, and not without so mighty a lout as that face could yield. Stanley.
The mind of man desireth evermore to know the truth, according to the most infallible certainty which the nature of things can yield. Hooker.
If you take the idea of white, which one parcel of snow yieldeth yesterday to your sight, and another idea of white from another parcel of snow you see to-day, and put them together in your mind, they run into one, and the idea of whiteness is not at all increased. Locke.

YOK

4. To give as claimed of right.
I the praise
Yield thee, so well thou hast this day purvey'd. Milton.
5. To allow; to permit.
I yield it just, said Adam, and submit. Milton.
Life is but air,
That yields a passage to the whistling sword,
And closes when 'tis gone. Dryden's Don Sebastian.
6. To emit; to expire.
Often did I strive
To yield the ghost; but still the envious flood Kept in my soul, and would not let it forth
To find the empty, vast and wand'ring air. Shak. Rich. III.
He gathered up his feet into the bed, and yielded up the ghost. Gen. xlix. 33.
7. To resign; to give up.
He not yielding over to old age his country delights, especially of hawking, was at that time, following a merlin, brought to see this injury offered unto us. Stanley.
Thus I have yielded up into your hand
The circle of my glory. Shaksp. King John.
She to realities yield all her shows. Milton.
'Tis the pride of man which is the spring of this evil, and an unwillingness to yield up their own opinions. Watts.
8. To surrender.
The enemies sometimes offered unto the soldiers, upon the walls, great rewards, if they would yield up the city, and sometimes threatened them as fast. Kneller.
They laugh, as if to them I had quitted all,
At random yielded up to their misrule. Milton.
TO YIELD. v. n.
1. To give up the conquest; to submit.
He yields not in his fall;
But fighting dies, and dying kills withal. Daniel.
All is not lost: immortal hate,
And courage never to submit or yield. Milton.

There he saw the fainting Grecians yield,
And here the trembling Trojans quit the field, Pursu'd by fierce Achilles. Dryden.
2. To comply with any person.
Considering this present age so full of tongue, and weak of brain, behold we yield to the stream thereof. Hooker.
I see a yielding in the looks of France:
Mark, how they whisper. Shaksp. King John.
This supernatural soliciting, if ill,
Why hath it given me earnest of success?
If good, why do I yield to that suggestion, Whose horrid image doth upfix my hair? Shaksp. K. Lear.
With her much fair speech she caused him to yield. Prov.
The Jews have agreed to desire thee that thou wouldst bring down Paul; but do not thou yield unto them. Acts xxiii. 21.
3. To comply with things.
There could be no secure peace, except the Lacedemonians yielded to those things, which being granted, it would be no longer in their power to hurt the Athenians. Bacon.
If much converse
Three satiate, to short absence I could yield. Milton.
4. To concede; to admit; to allow; not to deny.
If we yield that there is a God, and that this God is almighty and just, it cannot be avoided but that, after this life ended, he administers justice unto men. Hakewill.
5. To give place as inferior in excellence or any other quality.
The fight of Achilles and Cygnus, and the fray betwixt the Lapithæ and Centaurs, yield to no other part of this poet. Dry.

Before Toulon thy yoke-mate lies, Where all the live-long night he sighs. Stepney.

Those who have most distinguished themselves by railing at the sex, very often chuse one of the most worthless for a companion and yokefellow. Addison's Spectator.

YOLD, for yielded. Obsolete. Spenser.

YOLK. n. f. [See YELK.] The yellow part of an egg.

Nature hath provided a large yolk in every egg, a great part whereof remaineth after the chicken is hatched; and, by a channel made on purpose, serves instead of milk to nourish the chick for a considerable time. Ray on the Creation.

YON. adv. [yeon, Saxon.] Being at a distance within view. YONDER.

Madam, yond young fellow swears he will speak with you. Shakespeare's Twelfth Night.

Good mother, do not marry me to yon fool. Shakespeare.

Would you not laugh to meet a great counsellor of state in a flat cap, his gloves under his girdle, and yond haberdasher in a velvet gown furred with fables? Ben. Johnson's Discoveries.

Tigranes, being encamped upon a hill with four hundred thousand men, discovered the army of the Romans, being not above fourteen thousand, marching towards him: he made himself merry with it, and said, yonder men are too many for an ambassage, and too few for a fight. Bacon's Natural History.

For proof look up, And read thy lot in yon celestial sign. Milton's Parad. Lost.

Yon flow'ry arbors, yonder allies green. Milton.

Let other swains attend the rural care, But nigh yon mountain let me tune my lays. Pope.

YON. adv. At a distance within view. It is used when YOND. we direct the eye from another thing to the object.

The fringed curtains of thine eyes advance, And say what thou see'st yond. Shakespeare's Tempest.

First, and chiefest, with thee bring Him that yon foars on golden wing, Guiding the fiery-wheeled throne, The cherub, contemplation. Milton.

Yonder are two apple-women scolding. Arbutn. and Pope.

YOND. adj. [I know not whence derived.] Mad; furious: perhaps transported with rage; under alienation of mind, in which sense it concurs with the rest.

Then like a lion, which hath long time fought His robbed whelps, and at the last them found Amongst the shepherd swains, then waxeth wood and yond; So fierce he laid about him. Fairy Queen.

Nor those three brethren, Lombards, fierce and yond. Fairy.

YORE, or Yore. adv. [yeogara, Saxon.]

1. Long. Witness the burning altars, which he swore, And, guilty, heavens of his bold perjury;

Which though he hath polluted oft and yore, Yet I to them for judgment just do fly. Fairy Queen.

YOU

2. Of old time; long ago.

Three bright-ey'd vesta long of yore To solitary Saturn bore. Milton.

There liv'd, as authors tell, in days of yore, A widow somewhat old, and very poor. Dryden.

In times of yore an ancient baron liv'd; Great gifts bestow'd, and great respect receiv'd. Prior.

The dev'l was piqu'd such faintship to behold, And long'd to tempt him, like good Job of old; But Satan now is wiser than of yore, And tempts by making rich, not making poor. Pope.

You. pron. [cop, iuh, Saxon: the accusative of ge, ye.]

1. The oblique case of ye. Ye have heard of the dispensation of the grace of God, which is given me to you ward. Eph. iii. 2.

I thought to show you How easy 'twas to die, by my example, And banish fate before you. Dryden's Cleomenes.

2. It is used in the nominative; and though first introduced by corruption, is now established. You nimble lightnings, dart your blinding flames Into her scornful eyes. Shakespeare's King Lear.

3. It is the ceremonial word for the second person singular, and is always used, except in solemn language. Madam, the fates withstand, and you Are destin'd Hymen's willing victim too. Pope.

4. It is used indefinitely, as the French on. We pass'd by what was one of those rivers of burning matter: this looks, at a distance, like a new-plowed land; but as you come near it, you see nothing but a long heap of heavy disjointed clouds. Addison on Italy.

YOUNG. adj. [jong, yeong, Saxon; jong, Dutch.]

1. Being in the first part of life; not old. Guests should be interlarded, after the Persian custom, by ages young and old. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.

He woos both high and low, both rich and poor, Both young and old. Shakespeare.

There's not the smallest orb which thou behold'st, But in his motion like an angel sings, Still quiring to the young-ey'd cherubims. Shakespeare.

I firmly am resolv'd Not to bestow my youngest daughter, Before I have a husband for the elder. Shakespeare.

Thou old and true Menenius, Thy tears are saltier than a younger man's, And venomous to thine eyes. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

He ordain'd a lady for his prize, Generally praiseful, fair and young, and skill'd in house-wiferies. Chapman.

In timorous deer he hanfels his young paws, And leaves the rugged bear for firmer claws. Cowley.

Nor need'st by thy daughter to be told, Though now thy spry blood with age be cold, Thou hast been young. Dryden.

When we say a man is young, we mean that his age is yet but a small part of that which usually men attain to: and when we denominate him old, we mean that his duration is run out almost to the end of that which men do not usually exceed.

It will be but an ill example to prove, that dominion, by God's ordination, belonged to the eldest son; because Jacob the youngest here had it. Locke.

From earth they rear him struggling now with death, And Nestor's youngest stops the vents of breath. Pope.

2. Ignorant; weak. Come, elder brother, thou art too young in this. Shakespeare.

3. It is sometimes applied to vegetable life. There be trees that bear best when they begin to be old, as almonds; the cause is, for that all trees that bear must have an oily fruit; and young trees have a more watry juice, and less concocted. Bacon.

YOUNG. n. f. The offspring of animals collectively. The hedge-sparrow fed the cuckoo so long, That it had its head bit off by its young. Shakespeare's King Lear.

So many days my ewes have been with young; So many weeks ere the poor fools will yearn. Shakespeare.

The eggs disclos'd their callow young; The reason why birds are oviparous, and lay eggs, but do not bring forth their young alive, is because there might be more plenty. Mor's Antidote against Divelism.

Not to her young; for their unequal line Was heroes make, half human, half divine; Their earthly mold obnoxious was to fate, Th' immortal part assum'd immortal state. Dryden.

Those insects, for whose young nature hath not made provision of sufficient sustenance, do themselves gather and lay up in store for them. Ray on the Creation.

YOUNGISH. adj. [from young.] Somewhat young. She let her second room to a very genteel youngish man. Tat.

YOUNGLING. n. f. [from young; yeongling, Saxon.] Any creature in the first part of life. More.

YOU

More dear unto their God, than younglings to their dam. Fairy Queen.

Younglings, thou canst not love so dear as I. — Shakespeare.

Grey beard, thy love doth freeze. — Shakespeare.

When we perceive that bats have teats, it is not unreasonable to infer, they suckle their younglings with milk. Broton.

Encourag'd thus he brought her younglings nigh. Dryden.

The stately beast the two Tyrreidae bred, Snatch'd from his dam, and the tame youngling fed. Dryden.

YOUNGLY. adv. [from young.] Early in life. Say we read lectures to you, How youngly he began to serve his country, How long continu'd, and what stock he springs of. Shakespeare.

2. Ignorantly; weakly. YOUNGSTER. } [from young.] A young person. In con- YOUNKER. } tempt.

How like a younger or a prodigal The startled bark parts from her native bay, Hugg'd and embraced by the trumpet wind. Shakespeare.

What, will you make a younger of me? shall I not take mine ease in mine inn, but I shall so have my pocket pick'd. Shakespeare's Henry IV.

See how the morning opes her golden gates, And takes her farewell of the glorious sun: How well resembles it the prime of youth, Trimm'd like a younger prancing to his love. Shakespeare.

Fame tells, by age fame reverend grown, That Phœbus gave his chariot to his son; And whilst the youngster from the path declines, Admiring the strange beauty of the signs, Proud of his charge, he drove the fiery horse, And would outdo his father in his course. Creach.

The youngster, who at nine and three, Drinks with his sisters milk and tea, From breakfast reads till twelve o'clock, Burnet and Heylin, Hobbes and Locke. Prior.

YOUNGTH. n. f. [from young.] Youth. Obsolete. The mournful muse in mirth now lift ne mask, As she was wont in youngth and summer days. Spenser.

YOUN. pronoun. [yeon, Saxon.]

1. Belonging to you. It is used properly when we speak of more than one, and ceremoniously and customarily when to only one.

Either your unparagoned mistress is dead, or she's outprized by a trifle. Shakespeare.

2. YOUR is used in an indeterminate sense. Every true man's apparel fits your thief: if it be too little for your thief, your true man thinks it big enough. If it be too big for your thief, your thief thinks it little enough; so every true man's apparel fits your thief. Shakespeare.

There is a great affinity between coins and poetry, and your metallist and critic are much nearer related than the world imagine. Addison on ancient Medals.

3. YOURS is used when the substantive goes before or is understood; as this is your book, this book is yours. Pray for this man and for his issue, Whole heavy hand hath bow'd you to the grave, And beggar'd yours for ever. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

That done, our day of marriage shall be yours, One feast, one house, one mutual happiness. Shakespeare.

This kiss, if it durst speak, Would stretch thy spirits up into the air: Conceive and fare thee well. — Shakespeare's King Lear.

Behold another day break in the east. Shakespeare.

While the sword this monarchy secures, 'Tis manag'd by an abler hand than yours. Dryden.

My wealth, my city and myself are yours. Dryden.

It is my employment to revive the old of past ages to the present, as it is yours to transmit the young of the present to the future. Pope.

YOURS'LF. n. f. [yaur and self.] You, even you; ye, not others. If it stand as you yourself still do, Within the eye of honour; be assur'd, My purse, my person, my extremest means, Lie all unlock'd to your occasions. Shakespeare.

O heav'ns! If you do love old men, if your sweet sway Allow obedience, if your loves are old, Make it your cause. Shakespeare's King Lear.

YUX

YOUTH. n. f. [yeoguth, Saxon.]

1. The part of life succeeding to childhood and adolescence; the time from fourteen to twenty eight.

But could youth last, and love still breed, Had joys no date, and age no need; Then these delights my mind might move, To live with thee, and be thy love. Shakespeare.

See how the morning opes her golden gates, And takes her farewell of the glorious sun; How well resembles it the prime of youth, Trim'd like a younger, prancing to his love. Shakespeare.

His starry helm unbuckled shew'd him prime In manhood, where youth ended. Milton.

The solidity, quantity, and strength of the aliment is to be proportioned to the labour or quantity of muscular motion, which in youth is greater than any other age. Arbutnot.

2. A young man. Sward's son, And many unrough yo:th even now, Protect their first of manhood. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

If this were seen, The happiest youth viewing his progress through, What perils past, what croiles to ensue, Would shut the book and sit him down and die. Shakespeare.

About him exercis'd heroic games Th' unarmed youth of heav'n. Milton.

O'er the lofty gate his art emboss'd Androgeos' death, and off'rings to his ghost; Sev'n youths from Athens yearly sent, to meet The fate appointed by revengeful Crete. Dryden.

The pious chief A hundred youths from all his train elects, And to the Latian court their course directs. Dryden.

3. Young men. Collectively. As it is fit to read the best authors to youth first, so let them be of the openest and clearest; as Livy before Sallust, Sidney before Donne. Ben. Johnson.

The graces put not more exactly on Th' attire of Venus, when the ball she won, Than that young beauty by thy care is dress'd, When all your youth prefers her to the rest. Waller.

YOUTHFUL. adj. [youth and full.]

1. Young. Our army is dispers'd already: Like youthful steers unyok'd they took their course, East, west, north, south. Shakespeare's Henry IV.

There, in a heap of slain, among the rest, Two youthful knights they found beneath a load oppress'd Of slaughter'd foes. Dryden.

2. Suitable to the first part of life. Here be all the pleasures That fancy can beget on youthful thoughts, When the fresh blood grows lively, and returns Brisk as the April buds in primrose season. Milton.

In his years were seen, A youthful vigour and autumnal green. Dryden.

The nymph surveys him, and beholds the grace Of charming features, and a youthful face. Pope.

3. Vigorous as in youth. How is a good Christian animated by a steadfast belief of an everlasting enjoyment of perfect felicity, such as, after millions of millions of ages is still youthful and flourishing, and inviting as at the first? no wrinkles in the face, no grey hairs on the head of eternity. Bentley.

YOUTHFULLY. adv. [from youthful.] In a youthful manner. YOUTHLY. adj. [from youth.] Young; early in life. Obsolete.

True be thy words, and worthy of thy praise, That warlike feats dost highest glorify, Therein have I spent all my youthly days, And many battles fought and many frays. Fairy Queen.

YOUTHY. adj. [from youth.] Young; youthful. A bad word. The scribler had not genius to turn my age, as indeed I am an old maid, into rallery, for affecting a youthier turn than is consistent with my time of day. Spektor.

YOUTHY. part. [y and right, from pitch.] Fixed. That same wicked wight His dwelling has low in an hollow cave, Far underneath a craggy cliff youthy, Dark, doleful, dreary, like a greedy grave. Spenser.

YUCK. n. f. [yucken, Dutch.] Ich.

YULE. n. f. [geol, yeol, yeul, Saxon.] The time of Christmas.

YUX. n. f. [yeox, Saxon.] The hiccough.

ZEAL

ZEAL

Z, is found in the Saxon alphabets, set down by Grammarians, but is read in no word originally Teutonic: its sound is uniformly that of an hard S.

ZEAL. n. f. [from zēlo, Latin.]

Powder the calx of cobalt, very fine, and mix it with three times its weight of powdered flints, this being wetted with common water, the whole concretes into a solid mass called zaffre, which from its hardness has been mistaken for a native mineral.

Cobalt being sublimed, the flowers are of a blue colour; these, German mineralists call zaffir.

The artificers in glass tinge their glass blue with that dark mineral zaphara.

ZEALY. n. f. [Probably of zani.] The contraction of Giovanni or fanna, a scoff, according to Skinner. One employed to raise laughter by his gestures, actions and speeches; a merry Andrew; a buffoon.

Some carrytale, some pleafeman, some slight zany,
Some mumblenews, some trencher knight, some Dick,
Told our intents before.

Then write that I may follow, and so be Thy echo, thy debtor, thy foil, thy zany,
I shall be thought, if mine like thine I shape,
All the world's lion, though I be thy ape.

Oh, great restorer of the good old stage,
Preacher at once, and zany of thy age.

ZEALICH. n. f. Zernich is a solid substance in which orpiment is frequently found; and it approaches to the nature of orpiment, but without its lustre and foliated texture. The common kinds of zernich are green and yellow; and to this we owe the distinction of orpiment into these colours, though there is no such substance as green orpiment.

ZEAL. n. f. [from zēlo, Latin.] Passionate ardour for any person or cause.

This present age, wherein zeal hath drowned charity and skill; meekness will not now suffer any man to marvel, whatsoever he shall hear reproved by whomsoever.

If I had had time to have made new liveries, I would have bestowed the thousand pound I borrowed of you: but it is no matter, this poor show doth better; this doth infer the zeal I had to see him.

O Cromwell, Cromwell!
Had I but serv'd my God with half the zeal
I serv'd my king, he would not in mine age
Have left me naked to mine enemies.

Among the seraphims
Abdiel, than whom none with more zeal ador'd
The Deity, and divine commands obey'd,
Stood up, and in a flame of zeal severe,

The current of his fury thus oppos'd.
Zeal, the blind conductor of the will,
She with such a zeal the cause embrac'd,

As women, where they will, are all in haste;
The father, mother, and the kin beside,
Were overborne by the fury of the tide.

The princes applaud with a furious joy,
And the king seiz'd a flambeau with zeal to destroy.
Seriousness and zeal in religion is natural to the English.

Good men often blemish the reputation of their piety by over-acting some things in their religion; by an indiscreet zeal about things wherein religion is not concerned.

True zeal seems not to be any one single affection of the soul; but rather a strong mixture of many holy affections; rather a gracious constitution of the whole mind, than any one particular grace, swaying a devout heart, and filling it with all pious intentions; all not only uncounterfeit, but most fervent.

When the sins of a nation have provoked God to forsake it, he suffers those to concur in the most pernicious counsels for enslaving conscience, who pretend to the greatest zeal for the liberty of it.

This rebellion has discovered to his majesty, who have espoused his interests with zeal or indifference.

A scorn of flattery and a zeal for truth.

ZEALOT. n. f. [from zēlo, Latin.] One passionately ardent in any cause. Generally used in disparage.

The fury of zealots, intestine bitterness and division were the greatest occasion of the last fatal destruction of Jerusalem.

Are not those men too often the greatest zealots who are most notoriously ignorant? true zeal should always begin with true knowledge, and thence proceed to an unwearied passion, for what it once knows to be worthy of such passion.

No wonder that so many of these deluded zealots have been engaged in a cause which they at first abhorred, and have withheld or acted for the success of an enterprise, that might have ended in the extirpation of the protestant religion.

ZEALOUS. adj. [from zēlo, Latin.] Ardently passionate in any cause.

Our hearts are right with God, and our intentions pious, if we act our temporal affairs with a desire no greater than our necessity, and in actions of religion we be zealous, active, and operative, so far as prudence will permit.

This day, at height of noon, came to my sphere,
A spirit, zealous, as he seem'd to know
More of the Almighty's works.

We should be not only devout towards God, but zealous towards men; endeavouring by all prudent means to recover them out of those snares of the devil, whereby they are taken captive.

It is not at all good to be zealous against any person, but only against their crimes. It is better to be zealous for things than for persons: but then it should be only for good things; a rule that does certainly exclude all manner of zeal for ill things, all manner of zeal for little things.

Being instructed only in the general, and zealous in the main design; and as finite beings, not admitted into the secrets of government, the last resorts of providence, or capable of discovering the final purposes of God, they must be sometimes ignorant of the means conducing to those ends in which alone they can oppose each other.

ZEALOUSLY. adv. [from zēlo, Latin.] With passionate ardour.

Thy care is fixt, and zealously attends,
To fill thy odorous lams with deeds of light,
And hope that reaps not flame.

To enter into a party as into an order of friars, with so resigned an obedience to superiors, is very unsuitable with the civil and religious liberties we so zealously assert.

ZEALOUSNESS. n. f. [from zēlo, Latin.] The quality of being zealous.

ZE'CHIN. n. f. [So named from zecha, a place in Venice where the mint is settled for coinage.] A gold coin worth about nine shillings sterling.

ZEDOARY. n. f. [from zēdo, French.] A spicy plant, somewhat like ginger in its leaves, but of a sweet scent.

ZED. n. f. The name of the letter z.

Thou whorefront zed, thou unnecessary letter.

ZENITH. n. f. [Arabic.] The point over head opposite to the nadir.

Fond men! if we believe that men do live
Under the zenith of both frozen poles.
Though none come thence, advertisement to give,
Why bear we not the like faith of our souls?

These seasons are designed by the motions of the sun, when that approaches nearest our zenith, or vertical point, we call it summer.

ZON

ZEPHYR. n. f. [from zēphyrus, Latin.] The west wind; and poetically any calm soft wind.

They are as gentle
As zephyrs blowing low the violet.

Shakespeare's Cymbeline.
Zephyr, you shall see a youth with a merry countenance, holding in his hand a swan with wings displayed, as about to sing.

Forth rush the levent and the ponent winds, Eurus and Zephyr.
Mild as when Zephyrus on Flora breathes,
Their every musick wakes,

Whence blending all the sweeten'd zephyr springs.

ZEST. n. f. 1. The peel of an orange squeezed into wine.
2. A relish; a taste added.

ZEST. v. a. To heighten by an additional relish.

ZETICK. adj. [from zēto, Latin.] Proceeding by enquiry.

ZETICK. n. f. [from zēto, Latin.] A figure in Grammar, when a verb agreeing with divers nouns, or an adjective with divers substantives, is referred to one expressly, and to the other by supplements, as lute overcame thames, boldness fear, and mad-ness reason.

ZOCLE. n. f. [In architecture.] A small sort of stand or pedestal, being a low square piece or member, serving to support a busto, statue, or the like, that needs to be raised; also a low square member serving to support a column, instead of a pedestal, base, or plinth.

ZODIACK. n. f. [from zōdiakos, Greek.] The living creatures, the figures of which are painted on it in globes. The track of the sun through the twelve signs; a great circle of the sphere, containing the twelve signs.

The golden sun salutes the morn,
And having gilt the ocean with his beams,
Gallops the zodiack in his glitt'ring coach.

Years he number'd scarce thirteen,
When fates turn'd cruel;
Yet three fill'd zodiacks had he been

The stage's jewel.

By his side,
As in a glitt'ring zodiack hung the sword,
Satan's dire dread; and in his hand the spear.

It exceeds even their absurdity to suppose the zodiack and planets to be efficient of, and antecedent to themselves, or to exert any influences before they were in being.

Here in a shrine that cast a dazzling light,
Sat fixt in thought the mighty Stagyrite,
His sacred head a radiant zodiack crown'd,
And various animals his sides furround.

ZONE. n. f. [from zōnē, Latin.] 1. A girdle.

The middle part
Girt like a flary zone his waist, and round
Skirted his loins, and thighs, with downy gold
And colours dipp'd in heav'n.

An embroider'd zone surrounds her waist.
Thy statues, Venus, though by Phidias' hands
Design'd immortal, yet no longer stands;
The magick of thy shining zone is past,
But Salisbury's garter shall for ever last.

ZOO

Scarce could the goddess from her nymph be known,
But by the crescent and the golden zone.

2. A division of the earth.

The whole surface of the earth is divided into five zones: the first is contained between the two tropicks, and is called the torrid zone. There are two temperate zones, and two frigid zones. The northern temperate zone is terminated by the tropick of Cancer and the arctic polar circle: the southern temperate zone is contained between the tropick of Capricorn and the polar circle: the frigid zones are circumscribed by the polar circles, and the poles are in their centers.

True love is still the same: the torrid zones,
And those more frigid ones,
It must not know:

For love grown cold or hot,
Is lust or friendship, not
The thing we show;

For that's a flame would die,
Held down or up too high:
Then think I love more than I can express,
And would love more, could I but love thee less.

As five zones th' ethereal regions bind,
Five correspondent are to earth assign'd:
The sun, with rays directly darting down,
Fires all beneath, and fries the middle zone.

3. Circuit; circumference.

Scarce the fun
Hath finish'd half his journey, and scarce begins
His other half in the great zone of heav'n.

ZOOGRAPHER. n. f. [from zōon and graphein, Greek.] One who describes the nature, properties, and forms of animals.

One kind of locust stands not prone, or a little inclining upward; but a large erectness, elevating the two fore legs, and sustaining itself in the middle of the other four, by *zoo*graphers called the prophet and praying locust.

ZOOGRAPHY. n. f. [from zōon and graphein, Greek.] A description of the forms, natures, and properties of animals.

If we contemplate the end of the effect, its principal final cause being the glory of its maker, this leads us into divinity; and for its subordinate, as it is designed for alimental sustenance to living creatures, and medicinal uses to man, we are thereby conducted into *zoo*graphy.

ZOOLOGY. n. f. [from zōon and logos, Greek.] A treatise concerning living creatures.

ZOOPLUTE. n. f. [from zōon and plute, Greek.] Certain vegetables or substances which partake of the nature both of vegetables and animals.

ZOOPTERICK COLUMN. n. f. [In architecture.] A statuary column, or a column which bears or supports the figure of an animal.

ZOOPTERUS. n. f. [from zōon and pteron, Greek.] A part between the architraves and cornice, so called on account of the ornaments carved on it, among which were the figures of animals.

ZOOTOMIST. n. f. [from zōon and tomos, Greek.] A dissector of brute beasts.

ZOOTOMY. n. f. [from zōon and tomos, Greek.] Dissection of the bodies of beasts.
